who as president would "bring prosperity to the country by beginning at the bottom and going up, instead of at the top and coming down." Governor Roosevelt was interrupted frequently by applause. It burst out when he enunciated each of his "three steps" for aiding agriculture. Referring to the "rotulously low levels" to which farm products had fallen and saying a "properly adjusted tariff" could do so much to raise them, he departed from his prepared text to ask: "How are they (the Republicans) going to explain a tariff of 42 cents when the wheat farmer today is getting 30 cents?" "Of course, that tariff today is absolutely inoperative as you and I know." The governor came to the arsenal after a visit to Lincoln's tomb. After leaving the huge crowd that gathered at the railroad station, his car wound through streets of the capital.
