

No Changes In Produce Market; Butterfat Firm

PORTLAND, Oct. 25 (AP)—There was no change in the open market for either cube or print butter for the day. The late session of the produce exchange was also without change for the various scores.

Strenuous efforts are being made by cold storage interests and parties acting for Dakota and Minnesota makers to force further advance in the price of butter here so that the ice house goods as well as the Midwest offerings can take complete control of the trade here.

In the meantime there is a firm tone for butterfat, with 19c 20c lb. the general buying price for churning cream here.

There was no change generally in the market for eggs during the Tuesday session. Prices were unchanged locally and the movement continued good although a greater bulk of ice house stock is shown.

Very slow trading tone is suggested in the market for live spring chickens with the supply more than adequate. Other chickens are holding at least steady.

There remains a fairly good demand for dressed turkeys with a slight increase in country buying around 25c basis for No. 1 stock. Reports indicate that a little of this present offering is meeting this grade.

Rather slow trading tone is showing again in the market for country killed calves although prices are practically unchanged. Veal and hogs continue steady to firm.

Honey prices are being shaded for both comb and extracted stock.

Cranberry sales are continued on a nominal basis with price held steady.

Home grown Brussels sprouts are finding a steady sale 90c-$1.00 box. Californian more active and quality good.

There is very little activity to report in the market for onions. Negotiations are still pending for liberal business with the Orient but the Chinese are not inclined to pay more than recent low values which are unacceptable to growers.

Movement of cauliflower by rail is slowly gaining with a slightly better cash market suggested although both the movement and prices are abnormally limited. Local trade is overfilled with 2c.

White and red beans are lower but trade suggests that the bottom has been reached.

SMITH GIVEN OVATION IN NEW JERSEY

charges of bigotry, deception and hypocrisy.

He attacked Col. William J. Donovan, Republican candidate for governor of New York, declaring he was on the Republican "board of strategy," directing the 1928 campaign when Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt made a speech which Smith said "aroused 'bigotry and intolerance'."

Smith claimed authorship of the Democratic repeal plank and assailed the Republican plank as holding out "a sop to the wets and a little bone to the drys." He called on New Jersey to make the senate Democratic at the next session by electing Percy Stewart to succeed the late Dwight Morrow.

Asks Election of F. R. Garner

And in conclusion, he said the "election of the Democratic ticket is the best way to solve these problems and the best way to bring back prosperity—the election of Roosevelt and Garner."

His return to the armory where he made a prohibition speech in 1928 bore the aspects of the home-coming of a hero. The crowd that jammed the cavernous drill shed, with its hunting draped rafters and its criss-cross of brilliant spotlights, cheered wildly.

On his way from the Holland tunnel, in Jersey City, thousands jammed the streets, welcoming Smith with horns and fireworks.

In the foggy stretch through the dark Passaic and Hackensack meadows, there was a reception for him. In Harrison, fire apparatus parked along the curb opened sirens to whip the cheers into a crescendo. Aerial Bombs Fired

Then Newark, and the progress up Sixth avenue, which had been transformed for blocks with tunneled arches of electric lights flashing, "Welcome Happy Warrior." Aerial bombs exploded salvos, and red, blue and green flares spotted the sky. Mayor Frank Hague, of Jersey City, who fought for Smith at Chicago and who introduced him last night estimated that 300,000 people lined his path from the Holland tunnel.

William Spray Jr., 31, fell dead, waving a flag in the armory demonstration.

Outside the armory the pressure of the crowds listening to amplifiers broke a 30-foot steel fence at the front entrance to the armory. Police barricaded the doors with heavy joists.

New Zealanders Praised

Of all the wonders of empire and of this world, I think the way the New Zealanders have taken beasts, birds, and fishes from one side of the earth to the other and stocked their land and rivers to supply us with food and themselves with sport is the most wonderful of all. They found an empty land and filled it with game, fish, and domestic animals, says a writer in the London Mail.

Beautiful New Zealand

Not content with rivaling Switzerland, New Zealand has wonderful fjords as beautiful and impressive as those of Norway, says a traveler. The mountains come down to the edge of the sea and end abruptly in precipices a couple of thousand feet deep, which continue under the sea for another 2,000 feet, so the highest lines can steam there in perfect safety.

Sterling Opens With Decline In London Exchange

LONDON, Oct. 25 (AP)—Sterling opened today at $3.29 1/2, an overnight drop of 2 1/2 cents. The decline was ascribed by brokers to further continental selling and the absence of control intervention.

There was no official statement to justify a report in today's newspapers that the pound would be stabilized within a month. The latest authoritative statement came from Sir Hilton Young, speaking for Neville Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, last Thursday. He said "we could prudently return to gold only when it is clear that the gold standard will work properly."

"It must satisfy conditions set out in the Ottawa resolutions. We must have a rise in the general level of wholesale commodity prices to a point more in keeping with the level of costs, and an adjustment of political, economic, financial and monetary factors which caused its breakdown in many countries."

POUND DROPS IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK, Oct. 25 (AP)—The British pound sterling continued its swift descent to new low prices for the year at the opening today. London cables breaking 2 1/2 cents further to $3.29 1/2.

The pace of decline was not so swift as at yesterday's opening, when the pound broke 6 cents in early transactions.

Other foreign exchanges were fairly steady.

DOLLAR GAINS IN PARIS

PARIS, Oct. 25 (AP)—Another two centime rise for the dollar on the exchange today was attributed in American banking circles to discontinuance of a movement to sell dollars, described as due to increased confidence in the dollar.

The British pound, however, continued to fall.

Locomotive To Be Extricated From Deep Mud

BAKERSFIELD, Cal. (AP)—Digging out a 285,000 pound locomotive that was buried under 15 feet of rock and gravel after it had been swept from its tracks by a mountain cloud-burst that cost 15 lives, will prove, rail executives believe, one of the greatest pieces of salvage work in American railroading history.

The Santa Fe locomotive, lost since October 1 when a 45 foot wall of water rushed through the Tehachapi Pass and caused damage estimated in the millions, was one of two large freight engines, which with at least six boxcars, which were lifted easily by the water from the tracks and deposited in a grave of silt 150 feet from the point of disappearance.

One of the locomotives, owned by the Southern Pacific, was found soon after the cloudburst, but the Santa Fe engine's resting place remained a secret until October 12 when it was found with the aid of a magnetic needle.

The needle, borrowed by Santa Fe engineers from the High school here, was the same as used in the relief work after the St. Francis dam disaster in locating turbines buried by that tragic rush of water.

The engine, swept down the stream bed was found to have been washed at least 50 feet from the main line spur. It was at a point 65 feet below the main line track level when found. A crew of laborers have unearthed one side of the locomotive.

H. S. Wall, mechanical superintendent of the Santa Fe lines, said he would construct a spur track from the main line to one end of the spur, he said, and a 200 ton crane on the other. The two giant cranes will lift the buried engine to the improved spur and pulled to the main tracks.

The superintendent said he expected the locomotive would be in use again within three weeks after it enters the Santa Fe shops at San Bernardino. Wall said he expected to lift the engine to the spur by the end of the week. He said the salvage job is one of the most spectacular ever attempted in American railroading.

BOSTON WOOL
BOSTON, Oct. 25 (AP)—Scattered sales of wool were being closed as occasional buyers entered the market today for moderate quantities to piece out stocks. Prices were steady compared with last week. Further quantities of strictly combing 64's and finer Ohio wools were sold at 19 1/2 @ 20c in the grease.

Chapter 15
A GIRL WITH GRIT

"Jervis was going down to swim."

Nan Weare told Ferdinand Francis, eager because at last she had found a trusting listener in whom to confide her gnawing fears. "He went behind those rocks where the pool was. It was ten years ago."

"What were you doing?" asked Francis.

"I was sitting on the beach," said Nan with her chin in the air. "There was a way down the low cliffs just beyond me. A man came down and went across to the rocks where Jervis was. I didn't see his face. I think he was walking on the cliff and saw Jervis and came down."

"He went behind the rocks, and in about five minutes I saw him again. He was going straight to another path up the cliff, before you come to Croyde Head. He went up that. I saw him half way up it. I never saw his face at all."

"Go on," said Ferdinand.

"I waited a long time. The tide began to come up. I wondered where Jervis was. I climbed up on to the path and looked out to sea, but I couldn't find him. The rocks hid the pool—I want you to remember that—I don't think anyone on the cliff could have seen it."

Mr. Francis nodded.

"That's true."

"I got frightened about Jervis. I went down to the pool, and he was lying half in and half out of it with his head bleeding and the tide coming in. The water was up to his shoulders. If I hadn't come then, he would have been drowned. If you hadn't come later, we should both have been drowned."

"What are you meaning?" asked Francis.

"That man went behind the rocks and came out again," said Nan rather breathlessly.

"Now what do you mean by that?" "You know what I mean—but I don't mind saying it. I mean that the man went behind those rocks because he knew that Jervis was there and that they couldn't be seen from the cliff. I mean that he picked up a bit of rock and struck Jervis with it, and went away and left him there with the tide coming in."

"You can't prove that, you know."

"Of course I can't," said Nan. "But you can be sure of lots of things you can't prove."

"That's so. But you didn't see him strike Jervis—you didn't even see his face; and now you say he's the man who did it?"

Robert Leonard who is with Miss Carey tonight.

Nan nodded.

"Let me go on. After you'd got us out of the pool you went to get help, and I stayed with Jervis. As soon as I heard you coming back, I got away up the cliff path. You see, Cynthia and I were down at Croyde with an aunt, and we were going back to town by the afternoon train. I got into a most frightful row when I turned up at our cottage dripping wet with my dress spoilt and my arm out. I was bundled into dry things, and we just caught the train."

"And afterwards I was ill—I believe I was very ill—and all the time I kept seeing that man, and Jervis in the pool. I want you to understand how it was that I could recognize him ten years afterwards. He was printed into my mind."

Ferdinand saw her eyes darken in a face that had lost all its color.

"You say you recognized him," he said.

She gave another of those quick nods.

"Yes—at once. There was a photograph in Jervis' study. It didn't show his face; it showed him walking away from me. Just as I'd seen him in my mind all those years. I recognized him at once, and Jervis told me his name."

"Ten years is a long time," said Ferdinand. "and—there's a good proverb about letting sleeping dogs lie."

"They're not sleeping," said Nan. "He tried to kill Jervis ten years ago, and he tried to kill him again today."

"That's a whole heap more interesting," he said. "I'm listening."

"Again Nan found it difficult to begin and, as before, she plunged."

"I saw Robert Leonard get out of a taxi. He was with Rosamund Carew. She went into the house."

"What house?"

"Her house. She went in; but he came back and spoke to the driver. I was on the other side of the taxi. I wasn't trying to listen, but I didn't want them to see me. Robert Leonard said, 'It's the four-fifteen. You'll have to hurry. He's sure to walk because he's got a craze for exercise.'"

"No names?"

She shook her head.

"No."

"What made you think—"

"I didn't at first. Let me tell you. The driver said, 'Suppose he takes a taxi?' And Robert Leonard said, 'You must just do the best you can.' He said he wasn't as keen on the job as he had been."

"And Robert Leonard said 'What's a couple of months for dangerous driving?' And the driver said it might be a lot more than that, but he'd do it because he was a man of his word."

"Is that all?" asked Francis.

"No," said Nan. She held her voice steady with all her might. "I met Jervis. I told him, and he wouldn't believe me, but because he was late for his appointment with Mr. Page he went by subway instead of walking. He would have walked, left of when he came out of his house. And when he came out, a taxi knocked on his way here, a taxi knocked him down. He saw it coming and jumped, or he wouldn't be here tonight."

"You saw this?"

"No. He was getting a taxi for me. He told me. His arm was cut—he had to go back and change."

"But you never heard any names about Jervis?"

"What made you think that?"

"I don't know—I just knew it. Don't you ever have 'hunches'?"

"Yes," admitted Mr. Francis. "I shouldn't be here now if I hadn't."

"Well, that's what I had," said Nan—"a hunch."

"A hunch isn't evidence. You know, Mrs. Weare, there wouldn't be much left of that story of yours if you took it into court. What does he want to kill Jervis for? You must have a motive."

"The money," said Nan.

"But he doesn't get the money."

"No—Rosamund gets it."

"Don't you get it—after Jervis?"

She shook her head.

"I was in Mr. Page's office—I know all about the will, because I typed it. I got a settlement. I shouldn't get anything else. If Jervis had an accident, everything would go to Rosamund Carew."

She pushed back the rose-colored curtain and stood up. The big still room was empty.

"I'm frightened," she said. Her eyes implored him.

"They crossed the room in silence. At the door Nan turned to him.

"If he asks you to come down to Weare, will you come?"

"Well, as a matter of fact he asked me," said Mr. Francis.

"And you said?"

"I said I'd got a lot of work to get through."

"Please, please come," said Nan.

"Well—I'd like to," said Mr. Francis.

"Nature in the Raw" is seldom MILD

THE FALL OF TICONDEROGA

"Nature in the Raw"—as portrayed by F. C. Yohn... inspired by that horror-filled dawn when the blood-thirsty savages fell on Ethan Allen's gallant "Green Mountain Boys" of Fort Ticonderoga fame. "Nature in the Raw is Seldom Mild"—and raw tobaccos have no place in cigarettes.

No raw tobaccos in Luckies —that's why they're so mild

We buy the finest, the very finest tobaccos in all the world—but that does not explain why folks everywhere regard Lucky Strike as the mildest cigarette. The fact is, we never overlook the truth that "Nature in the Raw is Seldom Mild"—so these fine tobaccos, after proper aging and mellowing, are then given the benefit of that Lucky Strike purifying process, described by the words—"It's toasted". That's why folks in every city, town and hamlet say that Luckies are such mild cigarettes.
