again until certain that it was workable. Mr. Warburg's declaration presumably was drawn out by the fact that France and other gold bloc nations had immediately pounced on one clause of the Pittman resolution as giving them a chance to further their drive to force America to revert to the gold standard and to stabilize exchange.

This is clause two, which provides "that gold should be reestablished as the international measure of exchange values." Many Nations Agree Six countries—Germany, Italy, India, China, Mexico and the Irish Free State—tendered full adherence to the Pittman resolution, while numerous others, including Britain, Brazil, Czechoslovakia, Portugal and Uruguay, agreed on the board principles.

France, through Jean V. Parmentier, expressed entire accord with the part of the resolution calling for stability in the international monetary field and with the clause providing for reestablishment of gold.

France also was ready to study the silver question but considered other parts of the resolution so "novel" that she wanted to know more about them before accepting. Senator Pittman was so greatly encouraged by the reception of his resolution that during the lunch recess he told his colleagues he thought it would be adopted with a few minor changes.

The favorable way in which the resolution was greeted had the effect of quieting discussion of an unofficial proposal, emanating from the gold standard bloc, that the conference adjourn until America had agreed to some form of stabilization.
