THE TINYMITES

(READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE)

WEE Duncy's shouting rang out clear and shortly Scouty said, "I fear that you are wasting time, lad. That old fute's no good at all."

"I'll bet the Imp just talked in fun when he said 'twas a magic one. It's brought no help. We are the only ones who've heard the call."

"Don't be impatient," Duncy said. "Just give me time. I'll go ahead and blow a few more notes and then somebody else can try."

"I still feel that the Imp was right. He wouldn't fool a Tynmite. Why, say, at any moment he may drop out of the sky."

THE Imp, however, didn't come, and Windy said, "We must try some new way to rescue Dotty. There's no sense in standing here. Perhaps the tree that holds her tight will flop right down to sleep tonight. Then I might grab our little friend, by sneaking right up near."

"Now, there's a thought that is worth while," said tiny Goldy, with a smile. "But, gee, it is a shame to have to wait until it is dark."

Just then all of the Tynites jumped. A noise was heard and their hearts thumped. "Woe Scouty was the first to speak. He loudly shouted, 'Hark!'

"THAT noise came from back in the trees. Perhaps 'twas caused by some strong breeze." "Oh, no it wasn't!" Duncy cried. "Can't you see what I see?"

"Oh, goodness, I can!" Goldy cried. And then she ran to Scouty's side, and said, "It's a serpent, and I'm frightened as can be."

"Perhaps that serpent heard my call and will bring us no harm at all," said Duncy. "We can wait right here and all stay out of sight."

"Before we're through we will find out just what this whole thing is about. If we find we're in danger, we can run with all our might."
