EDUCATION AND AMUSEMENT

Americans spend too much for education, some people claim. Yet Americans spend for cigarettes and amusements half again as much as they do on all elementary and secondary schools. They spend as much money on motor cars as on all education. The nigger-in-the-woodpile of course, is that one doesn't buy luxuries with tax money.

A PLACE TO PUT THEIR MONEY

Both Pendleton and The Dalles are looking at the future with more optimism now. A bank has been opened at the latter place and a bank will be opened in Pendleton in the immediate future.

Normal financial conditions again will rule in these two Eastern Oregon cities, and probably no one has felt the lack of banking institutions more during the last few months than residents of these two places.

La Grande has a faint idea of the hardships Pendleton and The Dalles have gone through, but fortunately the people of this city and valley were able to restore their bank to excellent standing many months before their less fortunate neighbors could again have access to the receiving and paying tellers' windows.

MORE COSTLY THAN WAR

At the present rate of fatality something like 25,000 Americans will be killed in 1933 by automobile accidents. And with present unabated average holding up, something around 750,000 more persons will be injured this present year by the same motor route.

Isn't this a problem that is big enough to interest every American. There is no way to tell who may be the next victim. The way it goes there is always the possibility that it may be your child who is sacrificed next to the American demon of speed, reckless or careless driving.

Why can't we all seem to be concerned? You would be if one of your loved ones suffered next. Why wait till the next block, turn or corner to slacken speed — why not start now a more careful observance of traffic regulations — why keep waiting until tomorrow to change a lot of things about driving we all know are careless and could lead to trouble or accident. Tomorrow may be too late.

WAR IN EUROPE?

Notwithstanding the compulsory disarmament of Germany as a result of the Versailles treaty, more men are under arms and ready to fight in Europe today than in 1914, prior to the World war.

There are conflicting interests and dangerous problems dividing the European states and actual fighting is not as remote as most people think. The feverish anxiety of statesmen today to reach some agreement regarding armament reveals the fear which lurks in their minds.

While there are other problems the three most dangerous issues in Europe today are probably these: (1) the Polish Corridor, that little narrow neck of land connecting Poland with Danzig, which also divides and separates German territory; (2) the conflicting ambitions of Italy and the enlarged state of Jugoslavia over the control of Albania and with it the entrance into the Adriatic; and (3) the continued resentment of Germany over its treatment since the end of the World war and an increasing determination to resume its place as an independent sovereignty.

Of course, Germany does not desire any war at the present time. Compared with her neighboring states Germany is hopelessly disarmed and incapable of waging a modern war. On the other hand, France and Poland see in the growing possibility of Germany being allowed to increase its military strength a strong danger and may desire to bring matters to a crisis now and prevent any possibility of a serious threat in the future. Whether or not war shall come in Europe depends upon the attitude of France and her allies because unless these countries eventually consent to a revision of the post-war settlement all the aggravated problems confronting Europe will continue to fester and may eventually provoke hostilities.

Trading at home is the only way to maintain the prosperity of this community. Boiled down that's the truth, regardless of whatever else may be said.

Two-in-One Dish for Summer Menus

By Jane Rogers

The busy housewife should be deeply grateful to the inventor of the casserole. Particularly is this true during the summer months when, by combining the meat and vegetable in one dish, the casserole reduces to a minimum the time it is necessary to spend in a hot kitchen. There is nothing complicated about the preparation of casserole dishes. The seasoning, however, deserves the most careful attention, for it can do much to make or mar the results. Pepper and salt are, of course, called for. In addition, the wise housewife has found that a dash of sugar, mixed with the pepper and salt, points up and blends the various flavors. Try this seasoning trio in preparing—
Veal En Casserole
Cut fleshy veal in cubes. Sprinkle with salt, pepper and sugar, and brown in salt pork fat. Brown a chopped onion in the fat; also two carrots cut in inch slices. Place the meat in the casserole. Add onion, carrots, and a cupful of peas. Add three cupfuls of tomato juice, cover and cook slowly. Thicken the sauce and serve the meat and vegetables in the casserole.

their orders with conservatism and are reluctant to stake too much on future developments. Early returns on June retail sales show volume well in excess of last year's figures, with the exception of some of the large cities in the east, where the margin of decline from the 1932 comparative record will be slightly wider than it was in May.

FLIER SENDS MESSAGE TO HIS HOMELAND

the flier himself, relayed across the wastes of Siberia to Moscow and sent on from there to his homeland.

"Safe, Anadir, Chukotka, Siberia," the message read, and it was signed "Jimmie Mattern."
Mattern's wife on the west coast had never lost her faith that he was still alive. Neither had his mother in Freeport, Ill., nor his backers in Chicago.

The unwavering hope of this little band of persons was shared by the United States coast guard. When Mattern's announcement of his safety was received the coast guard in Washington disclosed that ever since the flier disappeared while on the way from Siberia to Alaska, the coast guard cutter Northland had been searching Alaskan waters for him.

Center to Get Him
Word was sent to the Northland of Mattern's safety. Coast guard officials expected the cutter to be in touch with the flier shortly.
Only one message was received.
