ORGANIZED LABOR'S 'NEW DEAL'

Among the tremendous changes which were slipped into our national set-up almost unnoticed along with the industrial control bill, none is much more significant than the "new deal" which has been given organized labor.

Even organized labor itself hardly seems, as yet, to realize what a sweeping new charter this bill has given it. But not more than a glance at the new system is needed to convince one that the whole face of the labor situation has been most profoundly changed overnight.

A fair sample of the change can be seen in the bituminous coal industry. Here is an industry which has been about as essentially disorganized and competitive as any in America.

It has witnessed some of the most appalling struggles between labor and capital; it has written some of the tightest chapters in American industrial history.

Today, while the operators are splitting into two camps in their attitude toward the impending governmental supervision, the United Mine Workers of America are working feverishly to unionize coal miners in every coal-producing state.

President John L. Lewis is quoted as saying that 150,000 new members have already been enrolled. Union organizers are circulating freely in certain West Virginia and Kentucky fields which they never before were even permitted to enter.

Thus before the main items on the industrial recovery program have had time to get their heads above water, organized labor seems to have made long strides toward winning a battle that has been fought for generations.

Unionization of the coal fields, with its accompanying improvement in the distressing conditions under which the miners have to live, is in a fair way toward being accomplished as a mere by-product of a larger struggle.

It would be hard to over-emphasize the importance of this. We have moved so fast and so far recently that we are quite likely to go a long way beyond the most advanced of the old-time objectives before we have realized that we are started.

A year ago complete unionization of the coal fields looked like a Utopian dream. Now it bids fair to be a mere incident in a program that is infinitely larger and more daring.

THE ROAD TURNS

Within the past four months the entire future of the American people has been revolutionarily altered. Few realize the full extent of fundamental changes which have been set up by law and which are being now put into practice.

Our habits of government, of industry, of agriculture, of social responsibility, and of almost every description will be re-adjusted to a different day, unless the forces of reaction can block the completion of what liberalism has started.

Looking back, it is probably no exaggeration to say that the American social and economic structure was closer to a gigantic catastrophe than almost anybody realized.

The legislation passed at the special session of congress permits a radical readjustment of our entire lives and if this power is wisely and safely administered by the executive agents with whom it has been lodged, the America of the future will be developed upon a pattern entirely unlike that which any reasonable body would have thought possible up to the early months of 1933.

The American people will be tested during the coming years. To successfully and wisely plan society (as the new legislative measures have begun to provide for) will require a degree of average intelligence applied to government which we have hardly been fortunate enough to have enjoyed previously.

The great number of farmers, laborers, and ordinary citizens will have to practice a temperance of desire or else inordinate greed and selfishness may cause the entire project to be misapplied and ruined.

Thrilling facts: The world, it is said, moves 9000 miles a minute about its galaxy, revolves 1110 miles a minute about the sun and turns on its axis once a day. Puzzle: what direction does it travel?

Doug and Mary have separated. The public announcement merely confirms what many thought in view of Doug's recent trips alone around the world.

Any fool can pick a quarrel but it often takes a smart boy or girl to keep out of a senseless controversy.

Senators Again Leading League; A's Are Beaten

By Herbert W. Barker (Associated Press Sports Writer) Through the once impregnable pitching armor of the Philadelphia Athletics' twin mound ace, Bob Grove and George Barnshaw, the Washington Senators have blasted their way once more to the top of the American league standing.

Take advantage of the New York Yankees' idleness, the Senators battered the A's into defeat in both games of a doubleheader yesterday, 5-2 and 10-8 and moved into first place by a half game margin.
