

NEVER ANOTHER LIKE JOHNSON IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

By Sigrid Arne WASHINGTON (AP) — Never in the memories of the newspaper corps here "has there been such a man in Washington" as Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, industrial recovery administrator.

Energy seems to crackle from him like so much electricity. He knows the electricity of his job in getting the wheels of industry humming again. And yet, he works easily, never seems flustered, even has time for a smile and a quip.

Newspapermen surround him as he approaches his office in the morning. He smiles. "Not a thing now," he says. "Give you a wad later. Busy as all get-out."

All in a Day's Work He swings in to his desk. Secretaries surround him. There are telegrams to answer, letters to dictate, long distance calls to pick up. He takes it in a deliberate, rhythmic stride.

He has time pared to a bone. Not a move or a word seems wasted. He knows the boundaries of his job to a hair-line, and he refuses to waste time outside.

"What are you doing about general wage scales?" he was asked. "That's not my baby," he barked genially.

And the questioner left willingly to find out what he should have known. The general has imbued the halls of the department of commerce with such wholesome respect that his word is law.

That does not mean he scatters terror. He is no czar. He is a government mediator. He never forgets it. But as such he wants to know everything definitely and completely.

Attends Code Hearings He sits in on all code hearings at some time. Huge auditoriums of business executives and labor representatives wait for him. On the stage are his deputies and advisers.

Lamson Goes to Death Trial

YOUNG PEOPLE REPORT TRIP ACROSS COUNTRY TO BE FULL OF THRILLS

When Lynn Anderson, honor student in the timber high school, won the trip to the Century of Progress for herself and her instructor, Benj. Raskeff, his friends and acquaintances, in fact the entire valley, were quite thrilled over the honor which had come to him in the nation-wide contest staged by an eastern magazine.

His picturesque phrases delight those around him. But he uses them in no childish attempt to draw a laugh. He utters them with a serious, flashing look, meaning them for his one purpose — speed. The picture phrases save time.

Particular On Personnel He was asked about the personnel he was choosing. He explained his need for men he knows well. "We can't put in men who'll get their pants trued off," he said.

His face is deeply lined, his large eyes alert, intelligent. His broad shoulders speak of strength. He walks briskly. His manner would make friends in a mine or a drawing room.

He gets less pay than some of his aids. His own business is forgotten. Hired An Objector Recently a well known executive approached him full of protests. His industry was going to fight.

"Maybe," smiled Johnson slowly. "But you're going to stay here and work for me." And the man stayed. He is working harder now than he ever has before.

The aim—and all Washington—is set to the tempo of this new "commander-in-chief" who gets up at 6, digests the newspapers, hold a breakfast conference of deputies, and then arrives at his office before 9 o'clock.

FRIENDS

Mt. Emily stands against the sky. A friend to all who know her; Unchanging she remains the same Through winter snows and stormy blasts.

Enriched by all they give her. In a life, friends unchanging, ever true. Though at times with sorrow laden, Come forth the same with lives made richer.
