NEW ERA FOR WORKING MAN

American labor can take a hitch in its pants and cock its hat over one ear when it celebrates Labor Day this year. On every Labor Day that anyone can remember, the nation has handed the working man a lot of flowery tributes about the nobility of his toil, and has complimented him with sugary phrases for being the backbone of the republic.

This year, for the first time, the nation is beginning to act as if it meant all of those things. In that fact there is signalized the opening of a great new vista for labor. It has its charter of freedom, at last; it has its most valiant friends in high places at Washington; it has a pretty definite assurance that it is not going to get marked cards from the bottom of the deck any longer.

And on this Labor Day, so significant with its promise of a new deal for the man who works for wages, it might be an extremely good thing if the men who own and direct the physical properties of the United States would sit down for a moment and meditate on the debt that they owe to labor.

Labor has played ball during the trying years of the depression. It has paid for those years in acute hardship—in hunger, in want, in loss of hope, in disappointment, in unwanted idleness. It has been tried as never before. It has seen the promises of former Labor Days turned into mockeries by the economic collapse. But it has kept the faith. It has not turned radical, it has not opened its brawny hands to destroy the system which let it down. It has simply tightened its belt and waited for a break in the luck.

Now the break has come. Labor can celebrate this holiday as never before. Its rights are written into federal law—its rights to a job, its rights to a living wage and a decently short working day, its rights to organize in its own way to protect its status. The federal government is pledged to see that those rights are respected.

With all of this, of course, goes a new responsibility. Labor has been given a new charter of rights; it is up to labor, now, to demonstrate that this charter will not be abused, to prove that capital and consumer alike can get from labor the kind of co-operation that will be necessary if the last uphill pull to prosperity is to be completed. That such co-operation will be given is easy to believe.

A new day has dawned for the American working man. His past record makes one confident that he will neither abuse the privileges it brings him nor neglect the duties it entails.

"Gold Diggers Of 1933" Pleases Movie Audiences

A Review

"Gold Diggers of 1933", now showing at the Liberty theatre, stands forth unquestionably as one of the finest and most entertaining of the musical shows of the year. Of course, it is not of an "operatta" type, but there is sufficient singing and dancing to satisfy those who like this sort of picture, and in addition there is an intriguing plot woven into the action.

Beautiful girls and sensational costumes, clever dance numbers, catchy tunes and the acting of the leading characters all contribute to making this show well worth seeing.

Joan Blondell nearly steals the show from Ruby Keeler, who is cast opposite Dick Powell, star of "42nd Street" and many other shows. Guy Kibbee, Ned Sparks and Aline McMahon furnish much of the comedy and do it very well. Warren William has a leading role as does Ginger Rogers and both are superlative in their parts.

The final showing of "Gold Diggers of 1933" is this evening.

RAINS END WEST OREGON FIRE CRISIS

The showers were not sufficient to extinguish the fires which have destroyed an area of more than 1200 square miles, but the moisture dampened the woods and rendered slow and difficult the progress of the creeping fires.

Further rain and heavy fog on the coast was predicted by the weather bureau.

Loss already has been variously estimated at between $15,000,000 and $25,000,000.

In Tillamook county, but one of the four counties through which the fires are burning, officials have estimated that not less than 200,000 acres of green timberland already have been swept by the conflagration.

AT THE LIBERTY

Will countless millions living now never die?

That's the absorbing question asked in Paramount's engrossing story of the spirit world, "Supernatural," which opens Wednesday at the Liberty theatre, featuring Carole Lombard, Randolph Scott, Vivienne Osborne, Allan Dinehart, H. B. Warner and William Farnum.

Here is an eerie story of the occult, chuck-full of the suspense. Ghosts walk, souls are reincarnated, spirits return to protect and to avenge in this exciting drama of the unknown so rarely pictured on the screen. It is a thrilling successor to the dramatic "White Zombie," made so effectively by the same producers, Victor and Edward Halperin.
