OVER THE VALLEY

MANY PROBLEMS AWAIT SOLUTION IN ANTARCTICA

By F. B. Colton (Associated Press Science Writer) WASHINGTON (AP)—Improved wireless communication, sea and airplane navigation and weather forecasting are some practical benefits in prospect from Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd's new Antarctic expedition.

His projected flight over the South Magnetic Pole may help solve some mysteries about the unseen but ever-active magnetic force that constantly crackles and wavers around the earth, as around a horseshoe magnet. The South Magnetic Pole, about 1,200 miles from the geographic South Pole, is one of the two focal points of this force, the other being the North Magnetic Pole. Effect On Compass Sought The magnetic force around the earth is what makes possible the use of the mariner's compass, for it points the needle toward the poles, but because the force is constantly varying for some reason not fully explained, the compass needle never points with absolute accuracy. Allowances therefore have to be made for variations in the magnetic force, and the better these are understood the more accurately pilots can steer their ships on sea or in air. This magnetic force also affects wireless, telegraph and telephone communication, which are disturbed by "magnetic storms" that result from disturbances of the force. More knowledge is needed of how wireless messages are affected when they pass near the North and South Magnetic Poles on their way around the earth.

Weather Data Important Weather knowledge gained in the Antarctic is highly important because the great unknown continent is a "weather breeder" for much of the southern half of the world. Weather of most of the earth is chiefly controlled by air currents that are cooled over the polar regions, flow near the surface toward the equator, are warmed, rise and return to the poles at higher levels. Scientists liken the Antarctic region to a great "heart" whose pulsations keep this process going in the southern hemisphere.

The circulating air governs rain and dry weather in Australia, South Africa and Argentina, where areas of "marginal lands" where there are great areas of "marginal lands" which crops and herds can be raised successfully only in years of plentiful rain. If the dry years could be predicted on the basis of new knowledge of Antarctic weather, great losses in these regions could be prevented. Shape of the earth, which isn't as round as it looks, is another problem that may be partially solved by exploration in the polar regions. The earth is flattened slightly at both poles, so that it is not exactly round. This makes the pull of gravity stronger near the poles. Possibility that the Antarctic continent is not a continent after all but really two huge islands with the water between them concealed by the great ice cap is another unsolved problem of the "bottom of the world."

Some scientists think Antarctica once was larger than now and served as a "land bridge" by which similar animals and plants reached the now widely-separated areas of Australia, South America and South Africa. CHAMPION APPLE TREE CENTRAL, S. C. (AP)—J. C. Meredith says he believes he has the champion apple tree of this section for prolific bearing. The tree, 47 years old, has been a regular producer for many years, and this season Meredith estimates it will yield 50 bushels of fruit.

CONSIDERATE THIEVES

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP)—Thieves visited the plant of the Shelby county milk producers' association, chiseled the lock off a steel cabinet and, finding nothing they wanted, left by way of the ice house where the milk is stored. "They considerably locked the ice house doors," said an official, "thus keeping the place cold for the milk."

KEEPS ELECTION PROMISE

MAYFIELD, Ky. (AP)—Bobbie Ray, newly-elected Graves county jailer, has the performance of at least one election promise to his credit. Surrounded by friends, he donned a necktie for the first time in seven years as the result of a promise he had made to wear a tie for at least three days in succession.

FOOD PROBLEM SOLVED

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP)—Shelby county's eating problem is nearing a solution. Thousands of bushels of vegetables, grown in community gardens by the unemployed, are being canned at the county penal farm. The city of Memphis and the county contributed $5000 each toward the work and an RFC allotment made three carloads of cans available.
