AT THE LIBERTY

Screen fans, who have been clamoring for a return to the screen of Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery ever since "Min and Bill," have their wish granted at the Liberty theatre, where "Tugboat Annie," with the beloved Marie as the redoubtable feminine tugboat skipper of Puget Sound, is now playing.

Based on Norman Reilly Raine's Saturday Evening Post stories, filmed on actual locales, with real thrills of ship rescues in storms, and the amazing feat of Beery who repairs a boiler, by going into a blazing firebox at sea, the new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture shows the pair in comical quarrels, mingled with episodes of poignant heart interest.

An elaborate cast includes Robert Young and Maureen O'Sullivan as the young lovers; Willard Robertson, Tammany Young, Frankie Darro, Jack Pennick and Paul Hurst in water-front character roles. Clever camera work amid the maritime thrills, storms and adventures adds a touch of excitement to the vivid new production.

THE NEED OF TEACHER COLLEGES

Mrs. Cornelia Marvin Pierce, member of the state board of higher education, voiced an urgent need of the Oregon school system during a speech Saturday evening in Eugene before University of Oregon Dads, when she put forth arguments in favor of four-year teacher college education.

There is no reason why Oregon's teacher training program should not embrace a four-year course. Over the nation, the trend is to convert two-year normal schools into teacher colleges, serving a particular region—dependent usually upon population and geographical location.

But Mrs. Pierce, in her talk, seems to favor, if we interpret her remarks correctly, a single teacher college and the conversion of present and possible normal schools and educational plants in La Grande, Ashland and Portland into junior colleges.

If this course were followed, we sincerely believe an error would be committed. It would, as far as teacher training is concerned, thrust the educational system back many years to the situation that existed when those desiring teaching education in Oregon at an Oregon institution, must attend one institution in the western part of the state — which discriminated against worthy students in Southern and Eastern Oregon who financially were unable to take advantage of the opportunities offered.

The geographical angles seem to insist that at least two teacher colleges, and probably three would be required to fairly and adequately serve Oregon's needs.

Mrs. Pierce's ideas along junior college lines deserve support—there is no question but that through affording junior college courses in La Grande, Ashland and Portland, that much congestion at Corvallis and Eugene can be done away with, and much greater educational opportunity offered to the southern and eastern sections of the state.

To take teacher training away from the large Eastern Oregon country, we feel, would be a mistake of tremendous proportions. Particularly in view of the fact that demand for education in this Inland Empire country is definitely on the upgrade. During the last two years enrollment at Eastern Oregon Normal school has showed substantial gains; registrations at other institutions, including the University of Idaho and Washington State college, have made much better records than in institutions farther west. This in face of large decreases in enrollment at institutions west of the Cascades. It can indicate but one thing, that the colleges and schools in this inland area are more than ever serving their regions, which in turn are sending their students to the institutions nearer home.

It seems the correct course to pursue would be to gradually change the status of the three normal schools to that of four-year teacher colleges; and to continue the two-year junior college courses at each. Then Oregon would have an educational system that would serve all sections alike, that would come nearer to fulfilling actual education needs of this state than in any previous period in Oregon's history.

Spud Battle In Portland; Sales Made At a Loss

PORTLAND, Oct. 24 (AP)—Fight among wholesalers established in the market caused much confusion in the potato trade today on the east side farmers' wholesale market. The fight was carried to such an extreme that wholesalers were selling Yakima and Deschutes Gems with a net loss of as much as 15c cental. Such tactics thoroughly demoralized the entire potato trade and local growers were unable to do business in volume at prices that were satisfactory. The action of wholesalers was such as to prove a most serious menace to the future of the market and called forth demand from home producers to eliminate the warring factions.
