putting duel, with Peterson holding a distinct advantage. E. O. N. putted 11 times for a total of 424 yards, an average of 38 1/2 yards. Idaho putted 13 times for 880 yards, an average of 29 yards. Peterson twice booted the ball 61 yards, with no Idaho return, and another punt netted 53 yards for Peterson.

In forward passing, the Normal school also held an advantage, completing six for a total yardage of 104. Idaho completed two for 13 yards, but used a lateral pass quite effectively. Neither line yielded in dangerous territory except when Miles scored and was called back.

The Mountaineers played with few substitutions, and every man in the Blue and Gold uniforms, turned in fine work, particularly the two ends, Hanks and Bredow, and the entire backfield. Hodgen's line drives drew much favorable comment. The Idaho line turned in some fine work, and Sayre and Swan, halfbacks, accounted for most of the yardage on off tackle plays and lateral passes. Sayre, particularly, was hard to stop once he was past the line of scrimmage.

Ray Berney played most of the game with an injured arm but Jags Burnett did not see any action. Crawford calling the signals.

Faculty and students alike today expressed appreciation of the support given the school during home-coming by the chamber of commerce, the business men, the Observer and the people of Eastern Oregon in general.

NEW COMMITTEE PLAN SUGGESTED

Word from Portland indicates that State Senator Fred E. Kiddie and Representative Earl Snell, president of the senate and speaker of the house in the legislature, respectively, favor a joint suggestion for appointment of joint committees at the November special session.

This is suggested as a means of expediting the work of the special session, which convenes Nov. 20, and for economy reasons. Indications are that if the majority of the senators and representatives approve the plan, it will be put into practice.

PROHIBITION REPEAL

Repeal of the eighteenth amendment, arriving with a speed few people in America thought possible, does not simply mark the end of a great experiment. It also marks the beginning of a new one, and it is going to be very easy for us to make just as many mistakes with the new as we did with the old.

For this reason the Rockefeller plan for liquor control is an extremely valuable thing. Whether or not we accept the solutions it offers for the various phases of the liquor problem, it at least serves to remind us that simply repealing the prohibition law is only half of the job.

We have tried one method of meeting the liquor issue and we have found that it didn't work. Now we must try some other method; and the suggestions in the Rockefeller plan can be very useful in helping us to make up our minds. The best point, perhaps, is the one which the Rockefeller plan emphasizes most strongly—that it would be wise to make a clear distinction between the kind of control that is needed for hard liquor.

Let beer, in other words, be sold by almost anybody who cares to get a license. Let wine be served freely with meals in hotels, restaurants, and cafes. Confine the sale of hard liquor to a few carefully chosen retailers, for consumption in peering of liquor prescribed for medical purposes, but minus the necessity of present prescription rule yet under strict state and pharmaceutical association surveillance, should prove worthy points of distribution to a qualified public purchase.

Needless to say, no such plan as this is going to satisfy everybody. The prohibitionist will find it too liberal; the man who looks back fondly to the old days will find it too strict. But it does serve as an excellent point of departure for discussions of the liquor control problem. It recognizes the perfectly obvious fact that beer and wine present one kind of problem, while distilled liquors present another.

Probably we shall have to spend a long time experimenting before we find a truly satisfactory control plan. The important thing is that we get busy now studying what kind of plan looks most sensible. The Rockefeller report can help us very greatly in the study.
