AN OBJECT LESSON

A smart metropolitan department store the other day presented one of the best object lessons yet devised to show just how the fruits of a rising price level are to be reaped. In a full-page newspaper advertisement, it printed two pictures of men's shirts. The shirts were identical in appearance, in material, in cut, and in workmanship. One of them sold for 89 cents; the other for $1.25.

The 89-cent one was the shirt this store had on its counters at the start of the summer. The other was one that is on sale now. The man who grew the cotton for the 89-cent shirt, the advertisement pointed out, lost money on it. His cotton pickers got canned goods and groceries in place of cash wages. The workers in the textile mills that changed the raw cotton into fabric got starvation wages — around $5 a week. The girls who turned the cloth into a finished shirt got a little bit less than that. The men who employed the workers in these establishments were not making money. And the store which sold the shirt was losing on the deal. Of course, for the purchaser, it was a bargain — of a sort.

Now for the $1.25 shirt. The man who raised the cotton for it got a decent profit on his crop. He paid his pickers in cash, not in groceries. The textile workers who turned the cotton into fabric got at least $13 a week. The girls who made the shirt got enough money so they could eat decently, live decently, and put off the burden of fear. Their respective employers were able to make a profit. The store itself was able to make money on the deal.

Gals and gloves don't mix, according to an old adage of the ring, but it appears as though Knobby Walsh, manager of the former world's heavy weight champion

So this shirt, as the ad went on to explain, for all that it cost considerably more than the first one, also was a bargain. It had no starvation wages, no child labor, no rising scale of losses woven into its fabric. It represented a fair break for everyone concerned in its production. The first bargain was a bargain built on human misery; the second, a bargain that promotes the welfare of the whole country.

You could apply much the same sort of reasoning to almost every commodity you buy. Whatever else it may do, a rising price level at least saves us from the ruinous "bargains" we have been getting in the last couple of years.

COVE PERSONALS

A 5½ pound son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Archer Antles Thursday at the Grande Ronde hospital. This is the first child of these young people and he is named Arden Agnew. Both his father and grandfather bear the initials A. A. although the names are not the same.

Mrs. Herscher, of Roseburg, returned to Cove Tuesday. She is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Kenneth La Violette and family.

Mrs. Chris Bertsch spent the weekend in Enterprise at the home of her brother, Fred Dutil.

Herbert Barker returned Tuesday after having been away since June. He went to the Willamette valley for the cherry picking and also worked through the hop season. Later he went to the Yakima country for the apple harvest. He reports the apples there small this season.

Guild met at the home of Mrs. Kenneth La Violette Thursday. Mrs. W. J. Hallmark assisted Mrs. La Violette. Mrs. Hallmark is not at present a member of the Guild but wished to show her appreciation of the good times she enjoyed as a guest of the various members. Five tables of bridge were set after the devotionals and the regular business meeting. The members of the Guild decided to meet Tuesday afternoon the 7th of November at the library to quilt on the quilt.
