

"Spend What We Can Wisely", Mrs. Roosevelt's Book Urges

NEW YORK (AP) — "Under the NRA the slogan should be 'Deal with fair people and make sure that they are fair with their employees and to their stockholders; spend what you can but spend it wisely and do not mortgage your future!'"

The words are those of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt in "It's Up To The Women," published today. The book is a prolonged chat, in which the president's wife gives the women of the country advice based on experience gathered through years of contact with public affairs and people of all types.

Advises Against Hoarding
"This is no time for the hoarding of money simply because we are afraid that the country is going to the dogs," she adds. "If it does, our money will do us no good so we might as well spend what we can wisely."

"We women in the home have another great responsibility. . . . Had we always insisted that the men take into account the human element that entered into business there would not be the fights there is today over what is the fair standard of living for everyone in this country."

Mrs. Roosevelt considers most of the phases of life affecting women in her book. Suffrage she believes is only beginning to show its possibilities.

Believes Homemaking Paramount
She declares that "I never like to think of this subject of a woman's career and a woman's home as being a controversy. It seems to me perfectly obvious that if a woman fails in love and marries, of course her first interest and her first duty is to her home, but her duty to her home does not of necessity preclude her having another occupation."

"Society" as it exists today "is of little importance," Mrs. Roosevelt feels. "Keeping up with the Joneses" is no longer so important because Mr. and Mrs. Jones are apt not to be very sure how long they can continue doing what they have always done."

FORT PECK DAM TO AID FARMERS OF THE MISSOURI

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Millions yearly in "farm relief" for the Missouri valley, through reduced freight charges, as well as other important advantages are envisioned by advocates of the government-approved Fort Peck reservoir project in Montana.

While the chief purpose of the reservoir is control of Missouri river waters to assure a 9-foot channel for navigation from the mouth to Sioux City, Iowa, other benefits foreseen include flood protection, water-power development, irrigation and control of erosion.

Six-Foot Plan Inadequate
Original projects approved by congress contemplated a 6-foot channel 200 feet wide from the mouth of the Missouri to Sioux City, but in the face of drought conditions continuing intermittently since 1929 engineers found that the 6-foot channel could not be maintained with so small a volume of water on the basis of the work already done.

The Fort Peck reservoir, when completed, is designed not only to supply ample water for irrigation and render usable the channel threatened by the low river level, but also to increase the navigable depth from 6 to 9 feet, permitting use of more efficient barges and towboats.

In pointing out the benefits of the developments, George J. Miller, executive secretary of the Missouri River Navigation association headed by former Gov. A. J. Weaver of Nebraska, declared that 85 per cent of the valley's annual grain surplus is marketed east of Illinois and north of the Ohio and Potomac rivers. 1929 estimates that the water transportation thus opened up would save the producer from 3 to 14 cents per bushel.

Miller quoted army engineers' reports estimating benefits of the project as follows—exclusive of navigation:

Flood control—$5,000,000.

Power privileges—Initial, $5,881,000; ultimate potential value, $35,000,000.

Irrigation—Potential irrigation of 180,000 acres of land, through furnishing cheap power.

Soil erosion prevention—Stoppage of annual loss of an average of 48 acres of tillable land per mile of river.

Land reclamation—Stabilization of river expected to reclaim 232,000 acres.

Water supply—Production of population of 2,000,000 directly dependent on the river.

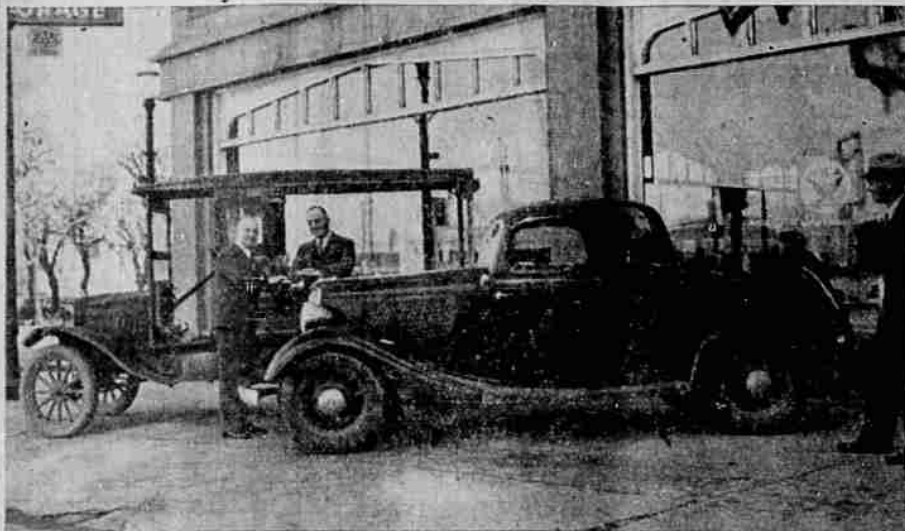

The reservoir, which ultimately will extend 175 miles along the Missouri in Eastern Montana, will cost $600,000,000 estimated, of which $25,000,000 has been allocated by the public works administration for the first year's work.

The dam, of earth fill construction, will be 231 feet at its highest point above the stream bed, creating a reservoir of 17,000,000 acre-feet capacity.

BLUNT SPEAKS SUNDAY NIGHT

J. H. Blunt spoke to a large group of people at the Baptist Young People's society last night on the topic "Shams and Pretenses." Taking the life of Christ and examples to show the pretense that was prevalent even in the religion of that day, the speaker showed the sham that exists today in business, politics, industry and even religion. "Many things must be labeled that one can know what the article really is," said Mr. Blunt, so it is with our religion too often. The parrot is made up of fess and feathers but the genuine little robin sings and works. Many so-called Christians are like the parrot and many are like the robin. Some church members almost need to be labeled to conceive that they are religious," he said.

Here is a picture of unusual interest — from several angles. Taken at the Perkins Motor Co. garage the other day it shows W. C. Perkins, proprietor, flipping a coin with H. M. Howard, manager of Safeway Stores of the La Grande district, to see whether he allows Mr. Howard $15 or $25 trade-in on the truck. Mr. Howard's smile, possibly a bit larger than Mr. Perkins', indicates that he won — which is the fact of the case. The truck, sold by Mr. Perkins to a grocery store — one of the early predecessors of the Safeway Stores — in the year 1922, has been in constant use for the last 11 years, and Mr. Howard traded it in on the handsome new Ford V-8 model, which also appears in the picture. The old truck was one of the first sales Mr. Perkins made after he came to La Grande to enter the auto business. At the extreme left of the picture is City Manager Angus McAllister. He saw the two cars on the sidewalk and, remembering his official capacity, immediately decided to investigate — probably to reprimand. But as he drew nearer and saw a photo was being taken, a smile replaced his look of determination (note the smile beginning to form).

Col. W. H. Palmer, who has lived at the Union hotel for a couple of years, left Friday night for the coast where he will locate.

L. E. Terrall spoke on the world conditions caused by war and the failure of the country to live up to the principles set forth in the preamble of the constitution and Lincoln's Gettysburg address. Harold Cline and Helen Harsin played a violin duet accompanied by Kathleen Conklin. The glee club under the direction of Miss Mildred Sloper sang "Homes of Picardy." Merton Davis, representing the American Legion, gave the school a book containing pictures made by artists during the World war. School was dismissed early in the afternoon and many attended the football game in Cove.

The Fifty-Fifty Pinocle club was entertained by Mrs. R. H. Jackson at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Jones Friday evening. Three tables were arranged for cards and the club prize was awarded to Mr. and Mrs. Earl Davis, guest prize to Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Hutchinson and consolation to Mr. and Mrs. Jones. The hostess served lunch after the games.

Miss Helen Schaper gave a review of the new book "As the Earth Turns," by Carroll at the Epworth League services Sunday evening. A large crowd of young people was present.
