To the Editor:
I spent the holidays in your fair city with my son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Riley, 1505 Madison avenue, and I surely enjoyed your fine weather. Our climate in Dayton is fine—the farmers are plowing and working on the roads. The high water washed out and damaged 20 bridges in this country, but there now is 200 men employed here on relief and reconstruction work, helping the poor man and bringing relief to all—thanks to our president.

Health

CINDER IN THE EYE
Undoubtedly, one of the most common of all eye accidents is that of being invaded by a cinder.
Part of the reason for this is that the protective mechanism of the eye works too fast, and to the sufferer's disadvantage, for no sooner is the cinder in the eye than the lids close tightly and the victim is driven by instinct to rub the eye.
However, instinct or no instinct, this is the wrong thing to do. For to shut the eye tightly and to rub it vigorously is apt to cause the speck or cinder to become fixed to either the eyeball surface or to the eyelid.
Furthermore, should the foreign body have sharp edges, rubbing will cause it to lacerate the eye tissues, thus exposing the eye to infection of various kinds.
Once a cinder has entered the eye, there are several simple steps to be gone through in an effort to dislodge it.
The first thing to do is to take hold of the eyelashes and by pulling on them draw the lids away from the eyeball. Since tears will naturally start flowing as soon as the eye is irritated, drawing the eyelids away from the eyeball creates a space in which the tears may accumulate and wash away the offending particle.
If this does not clear the eye of the speck, eyelids may be pried apart by use of the fore finger and thumb and the exposed surfaces inspected carefully for the foreign body.
If seen, an attempt should be made to remove the cinder or other object, using the corner of a clean kerchief or preferably a cotton swab made by rolling a bit of cotton on the end of a matchstick. Moistening the swab will facilitate the removal of the particle.
A good practice in this connection is forceful blowing of the nose. Running from the inside corner of each eye are two little tear ducts which lead into the nose. Blowing of the nose promotes tear drainage from the eyes, thereby tending to wash away foreign objects.

bers of the Union county committee of the federal re-employment service. The resignations have been forwarded to Guy V. Lintner, of Portland, representative of the re-employment service in Oregon.
Mr. McAllister was chairman of the committee, of which Mr. Peare, Harold W. Peare and Louis Evans are members. Both Mr. McAllister and Mr. Peare gave as reasons for resigning the fact that they were unable to devote sufficient time from their private business to serve on all three committees, and asked to be relieved from the re-employment service.
Both Mr. Peare and Mr. McAllister continue as members of the county relief committee and the C. W. A. local board.

Chats With Parents

CAVE MEN
By Brooke Peters Church
One of the most important lessons for a child to learn, and one of the most difficult to teach, is consideration for others. In a word where interdependence is constantly increasing, the man who thinks only of himself is a menace not only to his fellow men, but to himself as well.
The average small child is still at the cave man stage of development—he wants to seize and hold everything—and to overcome this natural instinct is often very hard.
Some children, of course, will offer their last piece of candy to another, and the tendency of loving parents and friends is to refuse it. It is a wiser plan, however, to encourage this trait in the child. Better to take at least a part of the proffered goodie and, if the child is very small, express appreciation.
As the child grows older such praise will not be necessary, nor will it be necessary, always, to take some of the candy. The idea of sharing once implanted in the child's mind, he will do it habitually for the sake of his inner satisfaction.
But for every child to whom generosity seems to come naturally, there are many who will not offer to share their candy, but who wish to go off alone and eat it all themselves.
Consideration for the child's health makes such a course unpermissible, of course, and some older person must keep the candy and do it out.
Often the child will suspect every one of taking some of his sweets, and will count the number in the box every time it is opened.
This selfish attitude must be overcome, by tactful suggestion, or by persuasion, if the child ever is to find happiness and satisfaction in life.

Single Church For All Sects Bonneville Plan

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Something brand new in the sphere of religious projects in Oregon is in store for the Bonneville dam site on the Columbia river.
Instead of a dozen major denominations rushing into the new settlement, each inadequately manned and financed, an agreement has been reached for a cooperative program.
The announcement was made here by Dr. E. C. Farnham, executive secretary of the Oregon Home Missions council and the Portland council of churches, that representatives of several Protestant denominations have agreed to raise the initial sum of $2,400 considered necessary to put on the Bonneville program for 1934.
Dr. Farnham explained that the cooperative effort of the larger denominations will insure one large church enterprise for the laborers at the dam. Directed activities of a recreational and social nature will be carried on during the week. A full-time minister will be employed.

FIBER CAP SAVES HEAD OF WILHITE IN TUMBLE

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Unscathed in a spill that might have been serious, Elbert Wilhite has become an enthusiastic champion of the fiber caps all jockeys are required to wear at Jefferson Park race track.
The 92-pound star rider, who hails from South Dakota, was thrown from his mount the other day and fell under flying hoofs. The sharp rim of a horse shoe cut the fiber cap in two, but spared Wilhite's head. Veteran turfmen said he would have been seriously injured, if not killed, but for the cap.

SUBSISTENCE FARMING

When the administration set aside $25,000,000 to experiment on subsistence farms, it started something the finish of which is a matter for the seventh son of a seventh son. None of the New Deal's experiments is more interesting than this one; few of them have more completely unpredictable consequences. The fact that the experiment is beginning to prove enormously popular indicates that we may bump into those consequences a lot sooner than we expect.
The idea is to set up colonies of small homes, each surrounded by a garden sufficient to provide its owner with most of his foodstuffs. Occupants of such homes would hold jobs in industry; some would work in coal mines, some in factories, and so on. The jobs would give them their income and the gardens would give them their food; if an industrial slump cut their jobs out from under them, they at least could keep on eating regularly until things picked up again.

That's the program. Now it develops that the government is being overwhelmed with a regular flood of demands for subsistence farms. The director of the project already has received applications which, if granted would run the cost of the experiment up to $4,000,000,000. Letters are coming in at the rate of 1000 a day. Here is pathetically eloquent testimony to the forgotten man's fear of insecurity, and also to his dislike of ordinary urban life. Furthermore, it is a pretty fair indication that there will be plenty of sentiment in congress in favor of extending the scope of the whole project.

These applicants are voters; you can depend on it that their congressmen are hearing from them. We are likely, then, to hear more rather than less of the subsistence farm idea in the future. Where will such a program lead us if it were expanded greatly? Would it—as some critics say—establish an American peasantry? Would it depress industrial wages and cut agriculture's markets? Would it solidify the population in such way as to diminish the fluidity of labor to a disastrous extent?

It might do all those things; it might do none of them. Probably the best way to find out is to try it and see; and that seems to be just what we are going to do—on a larger scale than any of us had expected.

New U. S. Policy In Emphasizing Producer Prices

CORVALLIS, Ore., Jan. 10 (AP) — A new policy in emphasizing producer prices in the dairy industry trade agreements, together with a definite decision that production control in the industry will soon be launched, has been reached by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, according to a telegram received by extension officials of Oregon State college.
The telegram came from C. W. Warburton, national director of the extension service, and was addressed to Paul V. Maris, state director.
It said the "new policy of the agricultural adjustment administration regarding milk marketing agreements placing emphasis upon producer prices was announced today by Secretary Wallace. The new policy will supplement the broad program of dairy production adjustment to be announced."

Dairy Officials at the State College Saw in the Announcement an Indication that definite decisions have now been reached on the long pending dairy adjustment program, and they believe these will be based primarily on immediate attention to farm prices.

Earlier forms of milk marketing agreements under the AAA were not sufficiently successful, it was said, one at Chicago having been abandoned just prior to the outbreak of the current milk war there.

GRASS NEED CUTTING? AW, LET IT GO AWHILE

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — The next time Johnny's "too busy" to mow the lawn, don't worry too much about it. You have the word of Dr. J. E. Weaver, professor of plant ecology at the University of Nebraska, that the lawn may be all the better for a delayed mowing or two.
A series of studies of the effect of frequent cuttings on lawn grass, made by Dr. Weaver with two students, resulted in his finding that clipping of grass stems reduces the strength of the root system.
Plants with sheared tops, he found, were much more susceptible to winter kill, while the thicker, stronger roots of the unclipped plants were healthier and had better water-carrying tubes.

Ogden was the first man to refer in writing to the Grande Ronde river, mentioning it both as the Clay river and Grande Ronde river. Among his personal characteristics were courage, fortitude and loyalty. He was not uncouth, and early reports show him to have possessed learning, a fine wit and conversational power. Because of these qualities, Mr. Inlow states, Ogden can well be rated the first and greatest of the early western mountain men.
