Amateur Radio Sets Made By Science Students

In Mr. Wright's room Tuesday, January 9, Gene Cummins and Norman Hogenesen sought returns from their amateur radio sets.

The cost of making these radio sets was relatively small. An approximate cost of the sets minus accessories was about $1.50 each.

The greatest task in making these sets, according to Gene, is securing the materials. It takes a considerable length of time to assemble ones made because of the small number of companies in the United States that handle the necessary equipment for making such sets.

The Radio club which meets in the sixth period of certain days has been organized for the purpose of teaching and enlarging the knowledge of students interested in radio.
