COMMITTEES GET DOLLAR LEGISLATION

Out of the added money to be spent between now and June the civil works administration will be financed. Congressmen found in downtown developments more material for reflection, including: The PWA attempting to allot millions for job-making construction, setting aside almost $8,000,000 for 33 non-federal projects in 23 states, including $71,000 for an armory at Klamath Falls, Ore.

Encouraging self-building. It likewise will enable the farmer to improve the unused land each year, he said, by planting soil-building crops.

Because of declining market prices, the farmer has been devoting an increasing number of acres to corn to obtain the total income necessary to meet his expenses. Urban continued.

"Now, with a mounting surplus, it is necessary to curtail the total yield of corn for the nation by reducing acreage. However, efficient tilling of the reduced acreage is as necessary as before."

Scientific anticipation of the yield per acre, Urban contends, is as much a factor in controlling production as reducing the acreage.

Corn Acreage Cut - Complying with the corn-hog program, the Wallace farm will reduce its 212 acres planted to corn seed. The farm also will cut the number of prize Tamworth hogs raised for sale.

In furthering its hybrid corn experiments, however, the farm may contract additional acres from other farmers. This year about 500 acres were contracted. In 1934 contracting will be confined to participants in the corn-hog program.

The outlook for 1934? "Very good," Manager Urban said.

Wallace's Farm Crop Cuts Won't Stop Seed Corn Hunt, "Pet" Project

By Thomas F. Hawkins GRIMES, Iowa (AP) - The secretary of agriculture's 435-acre farm will participate in the federal corn-hog production control program, but development of hybrid seed corn to obtain larger yields from smaller fields will continue as before.

Increasing the acreage yield is in harmony with the government's program to relieve agriculture, says Nelson Urban, business manager of the Henry A. Wallace farm near here.

Tests Secretary's Theory - Identified production, he says, is the first of two premises on which Secretary Wallace based his theories. These premises, Urban said, are: That by increasing yield per acre, the cost per bushel may be reduced to the minimum, thereby increasing the margin of profit, and - That by controlling the acreage planted in view of extant surpluses and demand, the market price may be bolstered or maintained.

Also, Urban said, increasing the maximum yield of each acre of corn and controlling the number of acres planted, to keep down surpluses, will shorten hours of labor necessary to obtain the desired gross yields.
