KNOX LAW HELD CONSTITUTIONAL

The Marion county circuit court handed down a decision today declaring the Knox liquor control law constitutional. Thus ends the first round of what may be a three-round battle to test the legality of the law abolishing home rule, which was passed by the special session of the legislature last month and signed by the governor.

The city of Klamath Falls, plaintiff in the suit challenging the constitutionality of the act, will of course immediately appeal the case to the state supreme court. And all indications are that the state tribunal will make a decision as quickly as is possible. Regardless of what the state supreme court finds, there will still exist the possibility that the decision might be reversed if appealed to the United States supreme court.

The Knox act appears to the lay mind to be far-reaching in its potentialities, not only in this liquor situation but from other angles. It seems only right to thresh the matter out to a finish.

The state liquor commission has ruled that hard liquor cannot be served in hotels or restaurants, but that a patron may bring his own bottle there and drink as much as he pleases as long as he doesn't become disorderly. Wonder if the next step will be for hotels and restaurants to include "Tom and Jerry Batter" on their menus.

Men Are Hosts At Meeting Of U.P. Old Timers

A man's party and a man's lunch was enjoyed by members of the Old Timers' club of the Union Pacific and their wives Tuesday night when Boyd Pidcock, chief chef, and his committee of waiters arranged tables for bridge and pinochle, followed by a two course luncheon at the club rooms in the depot. Eighty-five were present.

The waiters, dressed in snappy aprons furnished by the Grande Ronde Meat company which also furnished the coffee, were J. F. Corbett, J. G. Keeney, W. C. Hoppel, T. B. Salmon, Walter Nowland, D. C. Mahoney, H. M. Turner and J. B. McLaughlin. A dainty yellow and white color scheme was carried out throughout the evening.

Prizes at bridge were awarded to Mrs. W. C. Hoppel and Leonard Norton, high, Mrs. Leonard Norton and T. A. Johnson, consolation. At pinochle Mrs. Ada Pidcock and Henry Gore scored high, while Mrs. T. B. Salmon and Lewis Wetzel received the consolation.

SUIT TO BE APPEALED TO STATE COURT

"This court is of the opinion," Lewelling's decision continued, "that the liquor traffic is one which the legislature has the right to assume is of state-wide importance and the problems which arise from such traffic are beyond the power of local municipalities to solve and regulate comparible with the best interests of the people of the entire state."

The decision did not go into allegation that the act was a violation of the federal constitution, stating the charges were not supported by briefs submitted. The opinion concentrated upon the home-run clause of the constitution.

COLD WAVE IS NOT SO COLD IN LA GRANDE

The predicted cold wave for Oregon arrived last night on schedule, but as cold waves go, it didn't amount to much. All the west and northwest winds could do to La Grande sent the thermometer no lower than 31 above. And today the weather man promises slightly warmer weather for tonight in Eastern Oregon, although indicating the possibility of either rain or snow for this section.

Tuesday's maximum was 47 above, and indications today were that the high would be several degrees below that figure, although well above the freezing point.

BLOND GODDESS

A New Serial by Herbert Jensen

SYNOPSIS: Frank Grahame finds himself involved in a tangle concerning Janice Kent, the movie star. Janice has met with a slight accident in her motor, and Frank believes the accident was engineered by a man named Ortega, a Central American anxious to have the movie executive Myberg kill a Mexican picture. Janice refuses to believe Ortega had a share in it, and Spin Winslow, fellow aviator with Grahame, suggests it may be because Janice wants the lead in Ortega's film. Frank is attracted to Janice, and resents Spin's insinuation; nor can Frank forget the vulturine face he saw peering through the window of Myberg's office, which aroused instinctive resentment in his mind.

Chapter Seven

DISAPPEARANCE

GRAHAME strode toward the phone. As he seated himself, he pushed his fingers through his hair. He made an unconscious gesture about his necktie. He dialed a number that was scrawled upon the telephone pad.

A maid answered the call. No, Miss Kent wasn't at home. Oh, Mr. Grahame? Would he wait a moment, please?

He watched the little clock upon the table across the room tick away the minutes. He listened intently, wondering if the connection had been broken—but, no, there was no dial buzz.

He smiled a little ruefully, thinking that perhaps this delay was but the beginning of his knowledge of women. Someone had said that women were never conscious of time with men. Some ironical husband, perhaps.

He felt a pleasant tingling at the immediate correlation of ideas that swarmed in his mind. That Janice Kent should keep him waiting was thrilling indeed.

A breathless voice finally answered.

"This is the maid speaking again, Mr. Grahame." Her voice sounded curiously disturbed. "Miss Kent isn't at home. No, no. Don't misunderstand me. She thought you would call, and was waiting. But when I went to her room she was gone! Hello! Hello! Are you still there, Mr. Grahame? . . ."

"Yes, Tell me. Hurry. Gone, you say?"

"Yes, gone. But she couldn't be. She was not quite dressed. But there's a jar of powder broken and spilled on the floor—"

Grahame interrupted, "I'll come right out." He hung up the receiver. He waited a moment and savagely dialed a number.

"Hello. Spin? Say, Spin, get over here. Instantly. What's that? Forget it. This is serious. Just talked with Janice Kent's maid. Janice is gone. Yes, yes. Disappeared. Hurry!"

As he stepped from the doorway of his apartment house into the street, headlights flashed upon him. Winslow, in his blue roadster, had hurried.

THE maid said with a trace of sullenness in her voice:

"I tell you Miss Kent always tells me where she will be. There may be studio calls, you know."

Grahame put his hand on Winslow's arm. "Lay off her, Spin," he remonstrated.

"You try," Winslow suggested. He watched the maid narrowly.

"How long ago was it," questioned Grahame, "that you saw her?"

She glanced at the clock on the dresser.

"An hour . . . a little less. Miss Kent said she would lie down for a while, then dress." She spoke directly to Grahame, ignoring Winslow. She had large eyes with long lashes; her hair was blue-black. Her skin was a little sallow, but she was good-looking.

"She expected your call. She said—if you phoned within the next half hour—to tell you she expected to have dinner with you. Otherwise she'd talk with you herself. You phoned. I came in here to tell her. She wasn't here . . . just this."

She pointed to the crystal powder jar which lay in pieces upon the rug.

"Didn't you hear it fall?"

Her glance met Grahame's, then shifted to the floor again.

"The rug is very thick."

Winslow grunted. He said: "If she went out, what did she wear? Is that her dress on the day bed?"

"She was to wear that tonight. I put it out."

"Where are the things she wore when she came in? What were they?"

The maid frowned, thinking. "A blue ensemble." She glanced around. "It isn't here. I'll look in the closet." She stepped across the room and opened a door.

Winslow, behind her, whistled thinly and muttered, "Some closet."

IT WAS a small room; row upon row of clothes stretched across it on hangers. Winslow pointed to the end of a hanger that stuck out from one of the nearer rows. "What was on that?"

"I don't—A coat, I think. They're all coats on this rack."

A bell rang faintly. Footsteps sounded. They looked toward the doorway of the room. A dapper little man entered. He wore a pearl gray suit, a gray shirt and tie. There was a pearl set in the ring he wore. Only the tips of his shoes showed black under gray spats.

He said, in clipped syllables, "Hullo, Winslow. Hullo, Mr. Grahame."

Grahame nodded. Winslow said, "Hullo, Greene. How'd you get here? This isn't one of your damned publicity stunts, is it?"

Greene looked aggrieved. "Certainly not, Spin. Paula phoned me." He nodded toward the maid.

"Phone anybody else?" Winslow turned to the girl.

"Mr. Myberg. He should be here any time."

"Have you phoned anybody else?" repeated Winslow.

"No."

"Did anybody phone this number?"

Almost the girl hesitated. "No," she said.

"You wouldn't lie to me, would you?" Winslow smiled sardonically. "Who phoned, Paula?"

"Quit it, Spin," said Grahame impatiently. "You won't get anywhere that way. I think we'd better notify the police . . . right now."

"No!" Both Winslow and Greene spoke together. Even the maid's lips formed the word.

Grahame said, surprised, "Well, what—"

"No—" A strange voice spoke from the doorway. "We will not notify the police . . . not yet."

They turned. A man stood at the door. His head was round and bald, and sat upon his shoulders like an orange on a box; there seemed to be no neck. His figure was short and burly, and clad in black.

Greene called effusively, "Mister Myberg. How glad I am you're here. Now we may—"

AT THE LIBERTY

"Lovely Lady," the lilting tune sung by Jeanette Loff and Earl Oxford in "Should Ladies Behave", Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new feature which is showing now at the Liberty theatre, was especially written for the film by Brown and Freed, ace song writers. The scene is inside a Manhattan theatre, which the characters are attending. Miss Loff and Earl Oxford's rendition of the charming melody opens the show.

Doctors Give Creosote For Chest Colds

For many years our best doctors have prescribed creosote in some form for coughs, colds and bronchitis knowing how dangerous it is to let them hang on.

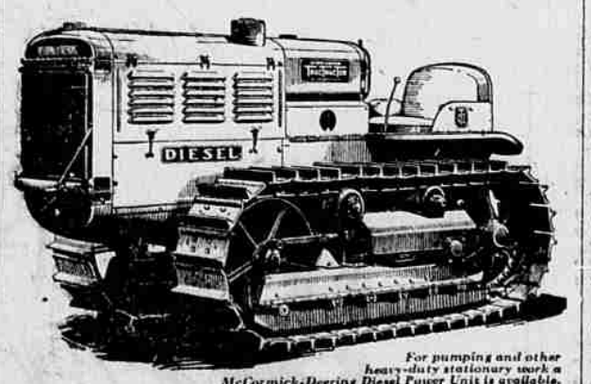
Creomulsion with creosote and six other highly important medicinal elements, quickly and effectively stops coughs and colds that otherwise might lead to serious trouble.

Creomulsion is powerful in the treatment of colds and coughs, yet it is absolutely harmless and is pleasant and easy to take.

Your own druggist guarantees Creomulsion by refunding your money if you are not relieved after taking Creomulsion as directed. Beware the cough or cold that hangs on. Always keep Creomulsion on hand for instant use. —Adv.

For the Hardest Kind of Work— the McCORMICK-DEERING Model T-40

DIESEL TRACTRACTOR



For pumping and other heavy-duty stationary work a McCormick-Deering Diesel Power Unit is available.

HERE is good news for crawler tractor users who need heavy-duty performance at the lowest possible cost per hour. International Harvester engineers have adapted the Diesel principle to TracTracTor operation. No auxiliary engine of any kind is used. The International Harvester Diesel engine is characterized by remarkable ease of starting and quick conversion to low-grade fuel. In fact, the shift from gasoline to Diesel fuel is almost entirely automatic.

Using low-grade fuel you can now couple exceptional economy of operation with the economy of maintenance for which TracTracTors are celebrated.

Ask us for complete details concerning the new McCormick-Deering Diesel TracTracTor.
