BLOND GODDESS
A New Serial by Herbert Jensen

SYNOPSIS: Frank Grahame, the explorer, who is in the jungles of Yucatan searching for Bill Langton, his missing aviator pal, has found instead the movie star, Janice Kent, whom he loves. She had been captured by the sublevados, and was being held prisoner at the top of an ancient Mayan pyramid with her press agent. The latter is asleep in their hidden place; Frank and Janice are discussing their situation.

Chapter 29

THE RAID

"I HAD hoped," Frank explained, "to make friends with the natives and get information through them. The chicleros, the men who gather chewing-gum sap, cover this country rather thoroughly, and see some strange things. I thought, perhaps, to learn enough through them to give me a clue to the spot where Langton had crashed. If he fell here they would surely know."

He shrugged his shoulders, and continued:

"There's not a chance getting anything from these buzzards, however. Nothing short of a squad of men with machine-guns could make any impression. If I get out of this alive, I'm coming back, no foolin'."

He interrupted himself to smile. "I mean when we get out of here."

Janice shook her head. Her eyes glowed and her chin was firm, but there was a hint of discouragement in her voice as she spoke.

"They're terrible. They're cruel. You should have seen—" She suppressed a small shiver. "When they appeared from the jungle, they stood calmly and shot our men down like, like. . . .

"We left Merida, Mr. Greene, Hogarth our director, and Wallace and Bill Jaehne, the two cameramen. Ortega guided us. We had eight natives to do the work, and take care of the burros that carried our costumes and film and stuff. We didn't need many props as we were only going to take long shots here, and some authentic jungle footage with native types.

"We trusted Ortega. He said McGrath, who was our production man, had gone ahead to prepare quarters for us. He—"

"I know about that. Tell you later. What happened?"

"We came into one of those open meadows, savannahs I think they're called. Without any warning we were surrounded by these people and they began shooting. It was just at the edge of these ruins, on the other side.

"I think Hogarth and the two cameramen were killed instantly. They were almost blown off their burros. Mr. Greene's burro ran away and thr w him. At first they thought he was dead, but found he wasn't. They were going to shoot him then, but they decided to take him in with me, alive.

"As we left that spot, I could hear an occasional shc. I think they were shooting our poor Mexicans."

"What of Ortega?" asked Grahame, already knowing the answer.

"That beast! He was smoking a cigaret when we came into the clearing. He was smoking the same cigaret w en we left. He watched everything with those muddy eyes of his, sitting quietly on his burro, and smiling a little. I think he would have helped the attackers if his arm hadn't been wounded."

"AH," breathed Grahame. "I gave him that. A pity I didn't hold more to center."

He answered her question by telling her of his trip with Ortega and their parting. He spoke of the boy Juan who had traveled with him to the spot, and of their meeting with McGrath.

"He was bush-whacked, the same as your party was. It seems to be a custom of the country. As far as I can make out, these people are living in this old city like a race of human spiders, luring people in here for robbery and—"

He broke off to stare at the floor. "But why didn't they kill me, then? They took the jewels I carried around my neck in a chamois bag, but they seemed—"

Her eyes widened as if with a sudden thought. Her teeth caught at her lower lip, and she drew a deep breath. She essayed a pale smile. Her hand reached toward Grahame until the fingers rested upon his arm.

"But we'll get out of here, won't we? I'm not a bit worried, really, Frank."

"Good girl." The man smiled.

He lifted his glance to meet hers. He moved his arm outward to take her fingers in his own, and reassure her. Midway, his hand paused. Over her shoulder, and silhoutted against the entrance, was a man's head!

A rifle crashed! In the narrow confines of the room the sound battened against his ear drums with a noise that was painful.

Grahame felt a shock against his back, and was flung sideways. The stone wall spun weirdly about him. His automatic thudded toward the entrance through which semi-naked figures poured. His shooting arm was numb. Vaguely, through his dizziness, he realized that he was firing with his left hand.

He was on his back. Above him was the roof-opening. He saw a man's naked legs dangling above him, and the heads of other men outlined against the sky. He fired upward. A body crashed upon him.

He heard Janice scream, "Frank! Frank!" Dully he saw her striking a savage face with a stone. An object thudded against his head, and he plunged through a flare of light into darkness.

FRANK first became conscious of two major pains, and several minor ones that were mere discomforts by comparison.

His right shoulder, below his neck throbbed poignantly, and there was a great ache in his head that seemed to be intensified rather than lessened by the cool moistness upon his forehead. A drop trickled down the side of his nose into the corner of his mouth. He licked at it thirstily with parched tongue.

"Oho!" exclaimed a voice at this ear. "The Governor of South Carolina has a thirst." He felt a cup at his lips and he drank greedily.

"Hullo, Greene," he said thickly, opening his eyes. Pain stabbed at his shoulder and head as he struggled to a sitting position.

"Take it easy, fella," cautioned the other. "You've had a nasty whack on the old bean, and your shoulder isn't the most pleasant thing I ever looked at."

"Where's Janice? What happened?"

"She's in the building here, somewhere. A fine hiding place you picked out. They carried us from there tied up like three Christmas packages. As a matter of fact you looked like something that wouldn't be opened 'til Christmas and a long time after.

"They shot you from the hole in the roof. Square bunch of guys. Shot you square in the back. Made a nice long trench from your shoulder to the small of your back, up high. Luckily, God gave you a shoulder blade. However, bullet's out, and you're doing as nicely as a young mother."

Mr. Greene grinned. His countenance was streaked with dirt and one eye was blue-black with puffiness. He looked, thought Grahame, like a man who had taken a considerable mauling. He glanced at the smaller man's hands. About the knuckles, they were caked with dried blood and dirt.

"You haven't a smoke about you, have you, Grahame? No? They cleaned me too. Have another drink."

Grahame reached for the extended cup, and paused as he saw Mr. Greene avert his eyes.

"Say," he demanded with quick suspicion, "have one yourself. This one's on me."

"Not thirsty," said Greene. "Had plenty before you woke up."

"You're a liar, charged Grahame.

"Who, me?" Greene's voice was filled with injury. "That's a hell of a name to call a man. Certainly is." He moistened his lips stickily.

Grahame reached for the water jar. He winced with the pain the movement caused him. He glanced within and saw that only a cupful remained. The sides of the jar were moist an inch above the water level and he was convinced that Greene had given him everything the urn had contained. He had been about to give him the remainder.

He pointed at the cup that Greene held half extended toward him.

"Drink it yourself," he said.

Greene shook his head.

"Drink it, you little squirt, or I'll dump it on the floor."

Greene sighed, and put it to his lips.

"Now what?" he asked, wiping his mouth.

"Do you know where we are?"

"In a long stone building, just a little away from the pyramid. Looks like a barracks, but it's probably the jail. Janice's here, too. She called to me a little while ago and I yelled back that you were O. K."

"She asked about me?" Grahame was curious.

"And nobody else." Mr. Greene's eye bore a twinkle.

Grahame arose and walked stiffly about their prison. It was not unlike the conventional prison cell, but larger. There were several stone benches arranged against the walls.

P. W. A. DISMISSES ADVISORY BOARDS OVER THE NATION

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19 (AP) — Out of funds, the public works administration has terminated the services of all members of state advisory boards.

It was estimated that the PWA had already allocated all of its first $3,300,000,000 and that it has applications for $3,500,000,000 from states and other political divisions on file.

Lewis Douglas, director of the budget, was reported to be drawing up a request for between $750,000,000 and $1,500,000,000 more for the PWA. It would be sent to the capitol in the next few days.

In some congressional quarters efforts are being made to have the larger amount appropriated.

Marshall N. Dana is the Pacific northwest P. W. A. regional advisor. The state advisory board for Oregon consists of C. C. Hockley, engineer, and Bert E. Haney of Portland, Robert N. Stanfield of Baker, and Dr. James Gilbert of Eugene.

LEE RETURNS FROM MEETING

O. A. Lee returned Saturday evening from Spokane where he spent almost a week attending a sales meeting of the General Petroleum company. He was accompanied home by his uncle, A. O. Lee, of Ashland, Wis., who will visit here for an indefinite period with his nephew and his brother, A. M. Lee.

HOG CONTROL COMMITTEE TO MEET TUESDAY

The county hog control committee will meet tomorrow afternoon at the office of County Agent H. G. Avery to check on the progress made and to set a final date for closing the sign-up campaign. The hog control program has met with good response throughout the county, the committee states.

OPEN REVIVAL SERVICES AT LOCAL CHURCH

Rev. J. L. Whirry, colporter evangelist, spoke to good audiences both morning and evening at the Baptist church Sunday. A number took a stand for Christ at the evening service. Services will be held each evening except Monday. Rev. Wm. Fairweather, of Pendleton, will arrive Tuesday to lead in meetings, and be the principal speaker. Mr. and Mrs. Whirry will visit the homes of the city. Mrs. Parkinson will have charge of the choir and music. The public is cordially invited to attend.

C. E. GROUP TO GIVE PROGRAM

Members of the high school age group Christian Endeavor society of the Presbyterian church are planning a special program for next Sunday evening, February 25, at 7:30 o'clock. The young people will be in entire charge of the service, with the president, Frederick Bingaman, presiding.

Included in the program will be a short play, talks by the young people, special music, etc., according to Miss Hulda Anderson, advisor of the group who is supervising the planning of the program. All who are interested are invited to attend this service.

When Thomas Hern, 71, was arrested for attempted burglary, St. Louis police said they found a record of sentences he had served for the offense in four states running back to 1893.

NAVY'S 'GREATEST' PLAYER TO TRY OUT WITH BROWNS

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Howard Robinson Mills, rated by his boosters the greatest baseball player ever developed in the navy, has obtained his discharge from the service to try his curves for Rogers Hornsby's St. Louis Browns.

L. C. McEvoy, vice president of the Browns, signed Mills, a left-hander, to a minor league contract, but reports of Mills prowess became so glowing that it was decided to take him to the Browns' training camp.

Lieut. J. E. Jones, U. S. N., retired, described by the Navy Sports News as "having seen them all," puts Mills at the top of baseball players produced by the navy.

Organizing 4-H Club Workers In Valley Districts

A series of meetings scheduled to reorganize Four-H clubs in Union county will open today at Imbler, when prospective members will meet with H. H. Rampton, assistant county agent, to organize the Imbler Sheep club. Indications are that there may be a potato club organized there also, Mr. Rampton said.

A Holstein club and a dairy club will be reorganized at Cove tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock. In the evening Mr. Rampton will go to Island City at 7:30 o'clock at the school to assist in re-organizing the Union County Beef club and the Island City Pig club.

The Liberty Calf club will re-organize Wednesday evening at the Liberty school.

It is believed that out of these communities will be organized also a farm accounting club.

ODD FELLOWS HOLD MEETING

Foster Naden, vice grand of the Odd Fellows lodge, presided at the meeting Friday in the absence of the noble grand, Galen F. Durkee. Mr. Durkee, Melvin Bork and Miss Lydia Hug, members of the cast of "Box and Cox," presented the play that evening at Enterprise.

Plans were discussed for a patriotic entertainment to be held by the lodge on Feb. 23, in honor of Washington's birthday.

Bags of Kilowatt Hours...

"A DIME'S worth of electricity please!"

Suppose you could go to the store and buy kilowatt hours by the bagful, just as you buy sugar and potatoes. Perhaps electricity would cost you even less then it does now, but you could do nothing with it . . . it would be useless to you.

For electricity does not begin to help you until it becomes electric service . . . until the energy that we get from water and steam is made into electricity and delivered into your very home, harnessed, tamed and ready to go to work.

The making of electricity is only a small part of our job. The sale of electricity, too, is not nearly as important as our real purpose . . . to sell you ELECTRIC SERVICE — not just electricity.

It is our ideal to make this service as perfect as humanly possible. If at any time it is not all you think it should be, won't you let us know?
