"Cold" Ashes Often Cause of Fire

many fires but that is not the major cause. Most of the existing fire hazards in La Grande occur in wiring. Mr. Lindsay pointed out emphatically that modern jobs of wiring, done by men who know their business and then properly inspected, present practically no hazard—if the householder leaves them alone!

That's one of the big troubles, he says. For instance, a fuse burns out. There are no extras. So John Citizen puts a penny in the branch circuit and thereby invites a call from the fire department. When he puts a penny in the branch circuit he simply takes away protection in case of an overload of electricity. Without the proper fuse, if his wires are over-charged, it usually means a fire. "Yet, many men, who wouldn't think of driving a car without brakes," Mr. Lindsay said, "will go away at night and leave their families asleep in a house with no protection from fire — all because of a penny in the branch circuit!"

Poorly installed electric motors are another fire hazard quite common, and every now and then some one tinkers with the wiring system, and thereby creates a hazard through adding to or altering the system without proper knowledge of how it should be done.

Still another thing that permits fire, once started, to spread rapidly, is the presence of extra rooms in basements not equipped with doors. Often fires are kept in one room because a door is closed, yet were the door open, the flames would spread rapidly and often devastatingly.

Mr. Lindsay urged all people to inspect their basements, and if any fire hazard—such as trash, old clothing, etc. is in a dangerous location in proximity to the furnace — may be removed. Oily rags are a constant danger when allowed to remain near a furnace or stove. There are many other hazards, also, but those mentioned above are some of the most common.

Mr. Lindsay pointed out that the city is willing to inspect — free of charge — places where fire hazards are suspected; glad to do it, in fact, in the hope of reducing future fire losses through taking of proper precautions to prevent blazes.
