Unloaded Gun Cause Of Death of Boy, 6

The boys had gone home from school and were alone in the house when the tragedy occurred. Robert had gone upstairs to change into his "play clothes" and Billy followed. The two began playing in the bedroom while their mother was at a P. T. A. meeting. They were playing "jail," according to Robert. He seized the gun which belonged to his uncle and which, he said, he had been told never to touch. He pointed the gun at his laughing younger brother shouting he was his "prisoner." He ordered him into the "jail," a small place behind the bed. Laughing, the smaller child backed into the "cell" with the rifle pointed directly at his breast.

"Then," the horrified older brother sobbed, "the gun went off," according to the report. The bullet went directly through Billy's heart; he fell upon the edge of the bed and then rolled to the floor with a smothered cry, the brother reports. Seattle authorities said after the accident and after talking to the family "it was an accident that could have happened to any family."
