

HOMEMAKERS' CONFERENCE ON MARCH 29

materials. There will be community singing and games and the service available to homemakers of the state through the home economics division of the extension service will be explained.

THE NEWFANGLES

Judith Lane

SYNOPSIS: Judith Lane's friend, the newspaper girl, Clara Sanford, just has called to say she must interview Judith as the "perfect stenographer." Judith recalls the business of her employer, "Big Tom" Stevens, who has watched over her since the death of her engineer father...

how, due to traffic lights, one-way thoroughfares, or perchance the inclination of the man at the wheel, Judith found them speeding across the arch of the bayon bridge with the queer town of little homes lying beyond in the dusk.

Chapter Two NORMAN DALE

JUDITH'S stenographic training, her practical and technical knowledge of engineering and the trust Tom Stevens was able to place in the daughter of a life-long friend, made her invaluable to him.

On the crest of the arch, traffic caught and held them a fleeting moment. Judith looked down on the roofs of the little town—"always reminds me of a library," she confided, "the roofs are like colored bindings of books turned upside down... think I'd like to live in one."

"No," countered her companion, meshing gears. "You should live in a house with slim white pillars and a green roof, green shutters and window boxes with pink geraniums." And then in the sheltered intimacy of a storm-assailed coupe they talked of homes and houses.

"I've never lived in a house," Judith confided, "it's always been construction camp shacks, tents, hotels, apartments and once, while Dad was building a bridge, I lived in a monastery, deserted of course."

The moon-faced clock brought Judith to the realization she was due to meet Clara in five minutes. She scurried to the locker, pulled the perky delft blue hat to a smart angle, donned the jacket of her new suit, whisked a powderpuff across her nose, a lip stick across her lips and grabbing letters to be dropped into the mail chute darted out of the office to the elevator.

"It would have been deserted once the occupants had, seen you," came the chivalrous response and Judith tilting her head forward 'o laugh, caught a glimpse of the clock on the dash board—"please I must go back, I'm meeting Clara Sanford, and while she's always at least fifteen minutes late, it's now twenty minutes after the time I was due to meet her."

The letters slithered down the glass chute like one-winged pigeons, Judith heard the elevator doors clang open. She stepped briskly into the car, then—"Oh," she said breathlessly looking up into laughing dark eyes which seemed amused at her start of surprise.

"I really don't know," Judith answered, "We're leaving for the Rio Diablo basin June first and Big Tom is quite liable to keep me working evenings to catch up with his other affairs before we go. Suppose you telephone me?"

"Working late, aren't you, Miss Lane?" asked Norman Dale, junior partner of the firm to which she had just mailed a letter.

"I will, or else I'll see you at board meeting, or drop down for a chat while Tom's off on one of his wife's pink teas."

"No," she countered, "just using the office as a waiting room. I had a late appointment." And under her breath words were slung—"the perky blue hat... the trim new suit... let the rain rub them, they've served their purpose. Norman Dale has seen me as something other than a cog in the office machinery."

"As if you weren't late, too," protested Clara preceding her into the main dining room, "and didn't I see you crawling out of Norman Dale's car?"

"Umhm," admitted Judith as they were seated at a window table, "any objections?"

"Plenty," retorted Clara with the frankness of an old school friend, "don't want you suffering from angina pectoris or some other heart ailment."

"What do you mean? Is there anything wrong with Mr. Dale?"

"No. That's the trouble. He's so completely all right every woman who ever sees him wants to take him home for keeps."

"Money?" inquired Judith guilelessly.

"Not much. Doesn't need it. Not that he's so heart breakingly handsome, but he has got a nice sort of a he-man look about him. There's a lot of millionaire mamas of marriageable daughters willing to make up the deficit if he'll only promise to love, honor and cherish their offspring. How he's managed to reach the ripe old age of twenty-eight without exchanging his freedom for a franchise is beyond my powers."

"Dale, Lampero and Morrison had been retained by the Bovius Construction company to handle its legal affairs since the inception of the company, and Norman Dale, assuming his father's place with the law firm, at the elder Dale's death, had gradually assumed his duties."

"Now that the board table and its symbolical barrier had been removed, Judith found herself responding to Norman's invitation with a still breathless—"I'd so appreciate it."

The car was at the curb. The Rice was four blocks beyond, but some-

TRAFFIC was a disappointingly light as they returned swiftly to the city, and Norman Dale, assisting Judith to alight, asked if they couldn't resume the discussion soon.
