The president spoke firmly about the increases voted by congress for veterans, repeating his stand for the principles outlined to the American Legion convention in Chicago last year.

"I am very confident," he said, "that the American people, including the overwhelming majority of veterans themselves, approve these principles and in the last analysis will support them."

The president reviewed the effort of special boards to seek justice for those veterans entitled to government compensation for service-connected disabilities.

He outlined the modification made by himself in the veterans economy act of a year ago and said that if justice required further changes he would make them.

"It is a simple and undeniable fact," he said, "that the United States, in terms of compensation and in terms of hospitalization, has done and is doing infinitely more for our veterans and their dependents than any other government."

"What you and I are seeking is justice and fairness in the individual case."

Meanwhile, a substitute for the house bonus bill, proposing a compromise between cash payment of the face value of the bonus certificates and cashing their present loan value, was introduced in the senate by Senator Pittman, (D. Nev.)

Pittman proposed to pay the veterans the amount of their adjusted service credit plus interest at four and a half per cent compounded annually since the armistice.

Five electoral votes would get only three, and the other candidate one electoral vote.

The use of such a system in the past, Representative Lea (D. Cal.), told the committee, would have changed the result in at least three presidential elections.

PREPARATION OF TEACHING STAFF EXCELS

The excellent integration of the practice teaching program at La Grande. Absence of a training school building on the campus was noted as a specific deficiency. As soon as the new training school building, proposal for the first team and the showing at the beginning of the year was not very good, but under the able direction of Coach K. G. LaViolette they steadily gained until they were able to finish very creditably.

Moreover, to the extent that the amount of money appropriated by the congress is in excess of my budget estimates, and in the absence of provision for additional revenues, there must be a decrease in the funds available for essential relief work."

It was his first veto of a major piece of legislation.

"My disapproval of this bill," said the president, "is not based solely upon the consideration of dollars and cents. There is a deeper consideration."

"You and I are concerned with the principles herein enunciated. I trust that the congress will continue to cooperate with me in our common effort to restore general prosperity and relieve distress."

Judith Lane

SYNOPSIS: Judith Lane has returned from the Rio Diablo engaged to Norman Dale, who is a junior partner in the law firm that handles the Rio Grande law business in Houston. Bevin is an engineer and contractor, and just has completed the surveys for a dam on the Rio Diablo that will reclaim the valley and help the impoverished settlers. The boat bringing back the engineer party docks near the Bevin's yacht, and Norman and Judith are killed by Norman's mother who has come to meet her prospective daughter-in-law in the yacht's tender.

Chapter Seven CLIA'S NEWS

UNDER Norman's guidance Judith went over the side, stepped into the small boat and made her way towards Mrs. Dale.

She was certainly handsome, Judith thought. She had Norman's coloring, not a streak of grey in her hair. She was reaching out a steady hand, and Judith, laying her sun-burned fingers in the firm pink palm, was suddenly shy before the studied elegance of the woman who was talking steadily to put her at ease.

"What a stunning looking child you are! I thought Norman said you were a business woman. Sit down there. If I kiss you now we'll both go overboard. I'm not built on skiff lines. Norm, this girl isn't old enough to marry."

"I showed him your latest picture. He ran it three columns, first page."

Judith regained her composure and smiled. "I'm willing to bet I'm more than ten years older than you were when you were married," she said.

"You're a dear child," was Mrs. Dale's response to the compliment. "In case you're worrying about your clothes (not that you don't look like a picture out of a book), your friend Clia is on board with—"

"Clia aboard?" questioned Judith, too overjoyed at having a friend in that desert of strangers to realize her rudeness. Clia Sanford could hold her own with a dozen Bevin women.

"Yes, very much aboard. How ever, I doubt that Ma'teel Bevin knew she was your best friend when she was invited." She gave Judith a wise twinkling smile, which puzzled the girl.

They were at the yacht's side, and Judith was squaring her shoulders to meet the crowd surging to their side of the yacht when she heard her friend's voice high above the others.

"Hello, Judy girl! Look at her. Do you blame any man for sacrificing his freedom for that figure... and wait till you see her eyes..." She threw a friendly arm about Judith as she stepped on deck.

"How do you do, Miss Lane? Your stateroom is below to the left, third door." Mrs. Bevin's fered Judith a mechanical smile, then saw that Mrs. Dale had stepped up to slip an arm about her. "Oh, if you are going down, Beth, I won't crowd things. Ma'teel seems to be taking her usual care of Norman."

Between Mrs. Dale and Clia, Judith was swept below to a luxurious room and after a quick tub came out to find them chatting over a fluffy array of clothes spread on the bed.
