HERBERT HOOVER, QUIETLY ACTIVE, WATCHING EVENTS

By W. A. Wells

PALO ALTO, Cal. (AP)—Smaller in girth than when he left the White House, but weighing between five and 10 pounds more, Herbert Hoover tanned by wind and sun today presents a vivid physical contrast to the care-burdened man who relinquished the presidency just a little more than a year ago.

His intensive activity relieved by equally strenuous recreation, America's only living ex-president seems to have found a formula for renewing the vigor and heartiness taxed by his service to the country in a troubled era.

Since returning to his Moorish type home atop San Juan hill, overlooking the campus of Stanford university, he has traveled by automobile alone more than 20,000 miles on business and pleasure.

His most recent excursion took him east as far as Chicago, with stop-offs in New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Kansas and Iowa. While the former president conferred with many chieftains of the republican party on that trip he insisted in press interviews that his pilgrimage had no political significance.

Trips Not Always Announced

There have been additional long trips by train to Arizona, Nevada, and Oregon; to Chicago to attend the World's fair; and other unannounced trips—on which he was more or less incognito. He has fished the streams of the high Sierras, the Rogue river of California and Oregon and traveled by boat hundreds of miles to spend three weeks fishing off the point of the peninsula of lower California.

Usually the Hoovers hold open house at all times. There is a steady stream of visitors—business associates, social acquaintances, former political associates, neighbors and friends of old days.

Builds Up Investments

There is a flood of mail, much of it personal in character, which taxes the capacity of a secretarial staff installed in a wing of the home.

The former president has retained his places on the governing boards of several national welfare and social agencies. He is active as a member of the board of trustees of Stanford university and recently took charge of the forming of an unofficial board of sponsors of Mills college in Oakland to foster the development of that educational institution for girls.

Although Hoover's business ventures since his retirement have not been announced, it is known that he has broadened his investments.

These varied interests take much of his attention, but he finds time to dictate personally much of his voluminous correspondence. He arises regularly about 6 o'clock, sometimes as early as 5 o'clock; breakfast usually preceded or followed by a short walk and he then plunges into the day's work. He frequently reads late into the night, chiefly biographies, newspapers and topical matter.

Almost daily long distance telephone conversations with his former secretary Larry Richey, in Washington, or with others in the copital or New York keep him in close touch with current politics. Always an avid reader of newspapers, he has more than 30 delivered regularly at the San Juan hill home.

Many political leaders of the state and nation have called on him from time to time since his retirement from office, but the names of these are seldom announced.

IMBLER SR. CLASS REHEARSING PLAY

IMBLER (Special) — Rehearsals have started on the senior play, "Madam the Boss," which is to be presented April 27. The cast is as follows:

Sally Webster, stenographer, Bernice Johnston; John Watts, a young lawyer, Lloyd Redman; Sammy Bright, the boss' publicity man, Dick Howell; Robert Higgins, political boss of Kendall, Delmer Fowler; Gilda Wakefield, his private secretary, Blanche Billings; Henry Wakefield, Gilda's father, Howard Wilson; Mrs. Robert Higgens, wife of Boss Higgens, Marguerite Hug; Tom Robbins, Higgen's right hand man, Clyde Ott.

TEACHING FORCE IS RE-ELECTED

IMBLER (Special)—The grade and high school teachers have all been reelected with the exception of primary which has not yet been filled. It is rumored that Walter Emrick, Smith-Hughes instructor, has a better offer elsewhere which he will accept. Salaries are said to be approximately the same as paid this year.

JOSEPH PERSONALS

Vern Cannon and wife, of Salem, have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. George Cannon, parents of Mr. Cannon.

Mrs. C. A. Collinsworth went to Union Friday to visit her sisters, Mrs. Gates and Mrs. Ella Hoskins, of North Powder.

Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Crawell have a ten-pound son, born Tuesday, April 10.

Mrs. Mamie Estes has been very sick of the flu for the past week and confined to her bed. Her friends are glad she is slowly improving.

J. D. McCully drove to La Grande Tuesday to meet Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mixer, who have spent the past four months in Portland. Mrs. Mixer is a daughter of Mrs. McCully.

Glenn Scott, Raymond Prout and Harold Masterson came in Friday from the CCC camp near Roseburg. They have been away several months but are not going back as they hope to get work nearer home.

Kirk Beith, who cut his foot while cutting wood several weeks ago, has discarded his crutches but is yet lame.

A surprise party was given Friday night at the home of Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Landers to celebrate the birthdays of Mrs. Louise Thoen and Miss Marjorie McClain. Those invited were Mr. and Mrs. Milo Fairchild, Mr. and Mrs. Verdo Fairchild, Mr. and Mrs. Erling Thoen, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Beith, Dr. and Mrs. Landers, Miss Maida Caldwell, Miss Marjorie McClain, Aubrey Estes and Dr. Rollin Baker. Dainty refreshments were served.

Mrs. Dave Church and daughter, Violet, have moved to Enterprise to be with Mrs. Church's son, Edwin.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis will live in the Church home in North Powder.

Mrs. Floyd Green was on the sick list last week with the flu.

P. H. Gaulke left Friday on the train for Portland.

Mrs. Melvin Bue and baby son are now home from the hospital at Enterprise.

Miss Lena Scott has had a relapse of the flu and is confined to her bed.

The W. B. A. ladies of Enterprise gave the opening dance at the Chalet, at the head of the lake Saturday night. A very large crowd was present.

HILGARD PERSONALS

Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Gray and children, of Durkee, visited his brother, John Graham, and family Friday.

Jess Williams has been called to Salinas, Wash., by the illness of his father.

Mr. Vanderpool has returned from a visit with his daughter, Mrs. Rex McCray, at Enterprise. His daughter, Mrs. Claude Bartmess, met him in La Grande.

Mrs. L. Walker and daughter, Marjorie, of La Grande, visited Mr. and Mrs. Steve Beacham, Tuesday. Mrs. Walker returned home that evening, but Marjorie remained for the week with her aunt.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Abbott, of Pendleton, were visitors here recently. Mr. Abbott works for Tom Boylen and was here looking over the range, ascertaining the condition of feed. They expect to bring the sheep into range soon.

Mrs. J. B. Weimer was hostess Saturday evening at a pinochle party in honor of her husband and daughter, Mrs. John Price, whose birthdays fall on the same day. There were five tables at play. Mrs. Fred Taal and C. Crow made high scores, Mrs. John Thornbrue and Wesley Taal, low. Two birthday cakes with candles were lighted at a late hour and served with ice cream. Mrs. Mae Stark, of Wallowa, was a guest from a distance.

Little Edward Hellin, who has been with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Salling, the past six months, returned last week to his home at Ogden, Utah.

COVE PERSONALS

Mrs. P. E. White, who has been ill and at a hospital in Baker for some time, came home a few weeks ago, but has returned to Baker for further treatment.

Miss Dorothy Mills, of Whitman, spent a brief vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Mills. When she returned to Walla Walla Allen Mills took her over, and was accompanied by Ned Martin and Grover Duffy.

Millard Van Dong, a former Cove boy, but now of Walla Walla, spent Sunday among his friends here.

Mrs. A. G. Conklin has been elected a delegate to the annual convocation of the Episcopal church to be held at Hood River April 15, 16 and 17.

Mrs. L. J. Chadwick and Mrs. L. E. Anderson were hostesses to the Ladies Guild at the home of the former Thursday afternoon.

Miss Besse Kelley was hostess to her bridge club on Saturday afternoon. Two tables were in play.

This is "blossom time" in Cove, all the fruit trees are in full bloom, and never have so many blossoms been seen. Every tree, even those that look half dead, are full of blossoms. It's a beautiful sight.

Paris Chooses Taffeta For Spring Evenings

PARIS (AP)—The Comtesse de Vallombrosa is one of a number of smart Parisians who are wearing bright taffeta evening frocks this spring. She wears a gown of the crisp silk in red, yellow and green checks. With it she wears an evening wrap of bottle green velvet lined with pink chiffon.

Judith Lane

by JEANNE BOWMAN

SYNOPSIS: Judith Dale has reorganized the old Bevins Construction Company, acting as agent of her former employer, the late Tom Bevins. But she must face the enmity of Norton Lampere, formerly Bevins' attorney, and of Mrs. Bevins and her treacherous daughter, Mathile. Judith's determination to carry out Bevins' plan to build the Rio Diablo dam may also wreck her domestic happiness, for she is the wife of Norman Dale, and Norman is Lampere's law partner.

Chapter 19

TRAGIC INCIDENT

THE sloping green roof, the slim pillars, the green shutters, the tiny balcony jutting out above the entrance, each had been dreamed out by the two of them, sketched roughly on letter backs, then turned over to the architect.

Slowly she entered and stood in the hall, pulling off tight gloves. Delphy came in from the kitchen.

"Lawz-ee, you is late——"

"What are all the lights on for, Delphy?"

"Ma'ss Norman, he say there's a mite a company comin' t'nite. Miz and Mis Bevin and Miz Dale and Mista Lampsear——"

"Norman," Judith turned to her husband who had come into the hall from his den, "Is Lampere coming here?"

"Yes. I invited those immediately concerned with the Bevins will. Judith, I hope we can settle this quietly among ourselves."

"You mean you are bringing them all here to my home?"

"It's my home too, Judy."

"But my only sanctuary. We can't ever erase what might happen here tonight."

"It's too late now. Better have your dinner."

Judith straightened, "You may bring them here, Norman, but as my relations with them are purely business I can refuse to see them outside my office. I do refuse——"

"Judy . . ." There was pleading in his voice, his face wore a harrowed expression. "Don't you see what we're doing to each other?"

Judith gave one tiny cry, startled, hurt, then flew into his arms—"Normy, why must this happen to us?" she whispered, "I can't go back on my word and I love you——"

"Then you will see Lampere?" he asked.

THEY walked upstairs. Judith removed her smart little hat and tossed it to the counterpane.

"Norman," she asked, "can't you see how useless it would be for me to talk to Lampere? It is impossible for us to meet on any common ground, it would only cause heartache for you, as for me. I'm so trembly from this afternoon, I don't believe I could stand anything more."

"Judith, if I thought you understood everything about the case; if I thought I could present it to you as Lom—as every other keen minded man sees it, then I'd do it and let you judge their views and the antiquated ones of our old friend, impartially."

Judith shook her head wearily. Big Tom had even known Norman's reaction. Lampere was his senior partner, his father's friend.

"Norman, it's useless." Judith slapped kid gloves to the dressing table to emphasize the statement. "Either you love me enough to carry on through this, or . . ." she held out her hands, pink palms up.

The door bell shrilled through the house and in a moment Lige came up—"Ma'n Lampere, he say he'd like to talk to Miz Dale, alone. . . ."

"Tell him Mrs. Dale has retired," said Judith.

She shrugged out of jacket and skirt, went to the wardrobe, reached in and drew out the first robe. She had slipped into it before she realized it was the ermine trimmed peach-glow she had worn the night of Tom Bevins' death.

"Norman, was it Lampere's idea they meet here?" she asked as she stood before him tying the folds of belt.

"Yes, but he came at my invitation."

Judith stood on tiptoe, slipped white arms about his neck and brought his head down to hers—"Normy, I understand so much more than you think I do. I'd like to tell you my side of the story, but it's useless, you're too prejudiced to understand. Kiss me goodnight and tell them down there that I'm . . . oh I know a nice Lampere effusion, "prostrated from the ordea. of the afternoon.'"

BUT when he had kissed her lingeringly, and had left her she was no longer poised, cool and self-contained. She trembled with a nervous chill and Delphy, coming up, snuggled her into a blanket in a deep chair and brought a pot of hot chocolate (her panacea for all ills) and a hot brick.

After the old colored woman had left, her kindness hung about Judith like an aura, a comforting aura. She looked out of the window on the swale and beyond to the grove of trees stretching east. She loved it all . . . this home, and Norman.

She drowsed a little, then sat up alert as Mathile's laugh sounded from the hall. Judith thought of the sob scene in the office that afternoon.

The sound of motors came from the driveway, meshing of gears, then silence. Soon Norman would come up and they would discuss things and perhaps find a way to compromise.

The moon was topping the grove as it had topped the Gulf horizon that night . . . eons ago it seemed to Judith. She had stood on the trawler deck and watched the shadows.

There had been a triangle and she with the strange premonition of women kind had sensed the shadow as more than a filament of fancy. One black bar had dissolved . . . one life had faded, and yet the triangle seemed to hold its place in her life.

Word by word she recalled her conversation with Norman that night. She had asked him if she must make a choice between her work and her marriage and he had said no. He had prophesied that she would be contented. She had been.

She would have been stronger in her fight against Lampere had she not been able to see the whole affair from Norman's viewpoint. She was a girl-wife, a stenographer, devoted to the memory of a man who had stood by at her father's death, then as soon as he was able, had given her a fine position.

He had suffered sunstroke, softening of the brain, something which had given him peculiar ideas . . . why else would a man leave the building of a dam to a stenographer! He had worked out a cunning plan and by playing on the girl's emotional loyalty was literally forcing her to carry them out.

Tomorrow, Norman goes over to the enemy.

HI-WAYS TO HEALTH

by ADA R. MAYNE

OREGON DAIRY COUNCIL

THE A, B, C OF BUTTER

And now we have grades in butter. Just as the housewife has been assured of quality when she buys grade A milk, she will now be assured of quality through the grading of butter.

The points considered by expert butter judges in grading butter are in order of their importance—flavor, texture, color, body, salt content and packaging. The term Grade A will be applied to the highest quality butter, made from choice sweet cream of desirable flavor. Grade B will be of good quality, made from good cream but which lacks the fine flavor required for Grade A. Grade C will include butter made from cream, which because of its flavor cannot be used for Grades A or B. These grades will replace the present ones now on the market, within a few days.

Food scientists recommend far more butter for health than is generally used. Butter is an easily digested food fat, rich in vitamin A which promotes growth and builds up resistance to diseases, especially cold. It has, too, important amounts of vitamin D, a necessary factor in the proper development of bones and teeth.

Besides this high food value, butter has a natural delicious flavor that improves any food to which it is added. The following recipes are delicious because they include generous amounts of butter.

Coconut Cookies

1 cup butter.
1 cup sugar.
4 beaten egg yolks.
1 more cup sugar.
3 cups flour with
½ tsp. soda.
1 tbsp. cream of tartar.
½ tsp. salt.
1 tsp. vanilla.
4 beaten egg whites.

Mix ingredients together smoothly in the order listed and with hands make into tiny soft balls without kneading or rolling (flour slightly). With a spoon or thumb make a depression in each ball and fill with jelly, then cover with cocoanut and bake about ten minutes in a 375 degree oven.

Waffles

3 eggs.
2 2-3 cups milk.
2 cups flour.
4 tsp. baking powder.
1 tsp. salt.
6 tbsp. butter.

Beat yolks well; add milk and sifted dry ingredients quickly. Add melted butter. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites last. This recipe makes six large waffles.

Honey Syrup

2-3 cup melted butter.
2 cups honey.

Heat honey and add melted butter.
