Training School Assembly Tomorrow With Ackerman Parent Teacher Group Announced For Two O'clock Sharp

The last meeting of the J. H. Ackerman P. T. A. together with the Training School Assembly will be held tomorrow afternoon in the normal school auditorium.

Miss Jennie Peterson will present the children in a program of music beginning promptly at two o'clock. At three o'clock a brief business session will be held at which time officers for the coming school year will be elected and all members are urged to attend.

Edna Mae Wilson Is Shower Honoree

Miss Edna Mae Wilson whose approaching marriage to Leslie Keffer was recently announced, was complimented with a shower last evening at the Lester Bramwell home, 1207 N. avenue, the hostesses being Mrs. Bramwell, Mrs. Clyde Zimmerman, Mrs. Harley Smith and Mrs. Fred Speth.

The guests were invited for dessert, the small tables at which they were seated having rose buds for their pretty decorations. Bridge followed with guests forming six tables. Prizes were received by Mrs. Lot Snodgrass for making high score and Mrs. Harry McCarthy for making second.

Miss Wilson received a nice array of gifts from her friends.

New Members To Be Welcomed

At Easter time a large class of new members was received into the Zion English Lutheran church by the minister, Rev. Edwin Bracher. To further that welcome, the members of the Ladies Aid society are sponsoring a pot-luck supper for tomorrow, Wednesday evening, in their honor. The hour of the meal is set for 6:30 and members of the church and congregation are invited to share.

High School P. T. A. Off a Week

The meeting of the High school Parent teacher association announced for Thursday evening has been postponed for one week and instead of being held this Thursday evening will come on Thursday evening, May 24. Election of officers will be one item of business for consideration during the meeting.

Two Hostesses At Monday's Party

Mrs. Philip Walnum and Mrs. No-

Judith Lane

by JEANNE BOWMAN

SYNOPSIS: Oil has been struck upstream from the Rio Diablo dam, which Judith Dale is building according to Big Tom Bevis's plan, with the fortune he left her for the purpose of diverting the water from the dam to be pumped by the strike, and she has arranged to take them to the scene, and provide a midnight lunch for them when they return. The oil drilling has been financed by Morton Lamper, who is trying to divert the Bevis money from the dam to the pockets of Mrs. Bevis and her daughter.

Chapter 38
NORMAN AGAIN
SINCLAIR, proprietor of the Elite Eating House, had been a top sergeant in the Marine Corps during the war. Judith went directly to him, told him what she would need and appointed him "Major" of the commissary department. He was to organize the other restaurant men, one to swing lumber into long tables, another to see about coffee, a third to organize the women into small groups.

Judith joined one of these groups. She cut bread, spread it, slipped slices of ham, of bologna, of cheese, of pressed meat, of chicken, of roast, between the bread.

Excited voices were constantly playing her with questions and she was constantly answering.

There were times when her weary muscles rebelled and she wished she were a thin slice of something to be slipped between sheets. She began to look upon her bed as a sandwich, herself as a filling, laughed at herself for thinking it, and then found Delphy at her side with a cup of coffee.

"Mr. Larson, he say he's back with one truck load and you're to come along over next trip."

Judith agreed wearily. She left the big tent with its makeshift tables, piles of sandwiches and washboilers of coffee, its laughing women, its returning truck loads of excited men talking "Oil-oil."

She climbed into the high seat of a gravel truck, sat between the driver and Larson. "Sandwich" she thought sleepily.

The shout of men in the truck awakened her after a long lapse of semi-slumber. This time her eyes saw twinkling lights, saw the skeleton derrick, looming ahead, saw men running like pygmies about a roped off enclosure.

Larson helped her down, steadied her a moment, then they walked over to the lighted area. Judith stepped in something that squashed under her feet. Oil... the place was drenched with it.

"She came in so fast we couldn't cap her," one man was saying excitedly.

Judith looked at him and then at the man to whom he was speaking, an oil-field worker, evidently, from his stained clothes. She started, leaned forward, peering intently, then closed her eyes and clutched at Larson's sleeve. The man was her husband, Norman Dale.

Judith Dale opened her eyes slowly. Larson, intent upon the scene before him, had not noticed. She looked past him to the man who had been talking to Norman Dale. He was still there but Norman had vanished.

Perhaps she was wrong. Perhaps she had longed so to see him that she fancied some person similar to him was he. This man had looked at her and his eyes had seemed to widen in surprise. Of course she hadn't seen him clearly, his hat brim was tipped forward, his face covered with several days' growth of beard. Norman shaved every day.

"That man, the one you were talking to when I came up, where did he go?" She had leaned across Larson addressing the man on the other side.

"He just saw a fellow he wanted to catch before he got away."

"He reminded me so much of a friend of mine, would you mind telling me his name?"

"Let's see, now what do they call him. Of course his nickname's Professor, because he talks so booky, and I think his other name is Jackson."

"Has he been in camp long?"

"Not so very long, 'bout a month or so, fine fellow." The man turned away.

Judith didn't sleep on the return trip. Perhaps Norman was there within a few miles or her, had been there right long and hadn't come near.

So he'd left Lamper, she thought in derision. Perhaps he'd left Lamper's office. Could he have been the man who had talked to Scoggins, his oil man? No, Scoggins would have remembered him as being her husband, Professor Jackson.

"Was he speaking for Lamper?"

No use thinking about it, her lan Skiff entertained a number of friends yesterday afternoon at the home of the former in the Allen apartments.

Three tables of bridge were formed with prizes going to Mrs. Otis Palmer, first, Mrs. Russell Parlette, fourth, and Mrs. George Brace, consolation.

At the conclusion of the afternoon, refreshments were served.

A. A. U. W. Officers To Entertain

The officers of the La Grande branch of the American Association of University Women are entertaining the members of the branch at the home of Mrs. Robert Eakin, 1812 Walnut street, Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. All members are invited.

"Universal Bible Sunday" will be observed on Dec. 9, 1934.

Health

Several factors contribute to rheumatic fever. First and foremost is the infecting agent, the precise nature of which is not definitely established, but the existence of which is not seriously questioned by anyone.

The clinical picture of rheumatic fever, and the various forms of damage which it does to the heart, nerve tissues and other structures of the body, all point to the same conclusion, that we are dealing with an infectious disease. But in addition, other factors apparently contribute.

Code Blue Eagle Is Available Now Freed Announces

PORTLAND, Ore. (Special)—Oregon business firms which have not yet made application to the state NRA compliance division for code blue eagles will find themselves the object of unfair discrimination on the part of the buying public unless they make immediate arrangements to secure the new recovery insignia. It was declared today by Edgar Freed, state NRA compliance director.

Application cards to be filled out by employers have already been distributed. These should be mailed to the state NRA office, as indicated on the cards, and the new blue eagle will then be forwarded.

The importance of making an early application for the revised insignia was stressed by the state compliance director, who pointed out that the national recovery administration is planning a nationwide campaign of education and public information designed to aid those firms which display the new emblems. Firms which are entitled to the code insignia, and have neglected making application for their emblems will not share these benefits unless they secure and display the code eagles to inform the buying public of their continued co-operation with the recovery program.

Firms which failed to secure application forms for the code eagle may obtain blanks at any postoffice. The state NRA office, 407 Park Building, Portland, also has a supply of the application cards which will be forwarded to any applicant on request.

LION'S SHARE FOR RELIEF, PUBLIC WORKS

lowances for veterans and government salaries.

The civilian conservation corps would get $285,000,000 of the fund proposed today.

The $100,000,000 tentatively tagged by the president for road construction contracts with the $460,000,000 road authorization bill recently voted by the house.

However, it is the opinion of Mr. Roosevelt that planned civil works is a quicker method of providing work relief and spreading government expenditures and there is every indication that he has a renewal of the civil works administration in mind on a more planned basis than the emergency CWA put quickly into operation last winter.

Principal items in the appropriation requested today by President Roosevelt follow:

- General public works-relief, $940,000,000.
- Civilian conservation corps, $285,000,000.
- Federal land banks, $75,000,000.
- Internal revenue bureau for bootlegging war, $10,000,000.
- Miscellaneous, $1,000,000.
- Total, $1,322,000,000.

The president wants discretionary authority in spending the general public works-relief fund.

Health

Several factors contribute to rheumatic fever. First and foremost is the infecting agent, the precise nature of which is not definitely established, but the existence of which is not seriously questioned by anyone.

The clinical picture of rheumatic fever, and the various forms of damage which it does to the heart, nerve tissues and other structures of the body, all point to the same conclusion, that we are dealing with an infectious disease. But in addition, other factors apparently contribute.

Climate and surroundings bear an important relation and exercise a marked influence upon the disease. Thus, it is known that in childhood autumn and spring are seasons when rheumatism occurs more frequently. The idea has been advanced that the sudden changes in temperature during these seasons have a debilitating effect upon the young. These are the months of acute sore throat and of colds. These are the months, therefore, in which children need more careful supervision as to food and clothing.

Very interesting studies made in England, and comparable studies made in the United States, have shown that rheumatic fever is more common among the children of the lower middle class than among those of the upper middle class, the rich or the very poor. Several English investigators have suggested that many children of the rich and the upper middle class are spared exposure to the rheumatic fever virus by their attendance at private schools, instead of the more crowded public schools.

To quote one authority's exact words, "Acute rheumatism is in my experience unusual in the private preparatory school, though far from being unknown." This he accounts for by the numerous precautions taken in private schools to exclude sick children from the classes. Also, these children receive prompt and adequate medical care whenever they are ill.

HEREDITY AND DIABETES

The old saying, to be forewarned is to be forearmed, is as true in medicine as in any other realm.

Granted there are certain individuals with detectable constitutional weak points, it stands to reason that if we can discover these points of lowered resistance, we will better be able to shield them against undue strain.

This is easily appreciated in the case of defective vision, where eyesight is conserved by abstaining from excessive use of the eyes and by paying special attention to illumination.

We can make a similar provision in the case of diabetes, in which a hereditary factor long suspected has been demonstrated in recent years to exist.

The discovery of insulin and its phenomenal effectiveness in the treatment of diabetes has overshadowed the problem of the origin of the disease. This remains unsolved. We know that diabetes is connected with the diminution or loss of the power or capacity of the pancreas to secrete a substance of internal secretion called insulin. But we do not have final information on what causes a pancreas to fall behind in meeting the physiologic demands put upon it.
