RESTRICTING BUSINESS PROGRESS

"The Annalist", published by the New York Times, says: "In some other major countries recovery is now under way. In some, indeed 1928 and 1929 levels have actually been regained. The recovery in these countries, moreover, has occurred in the face of a depression in international trade which is more important, in proportion to total trade, than in this country. Yet in the United States, whose position is fundamentally the strongest in the world, business has made only a modest recovery and the current trend is reactionary."

We live under the capitalist system. The same system under which the tremendous improvement of the past 150 years has been accomplished. True, some faults may have been uncovered and naturally in such system over such a period. It is the system however under which other major countries are now recovering from the depression. They have not discarded it, because they found a bit of evil existing in some selfish corners. They have held strongly to the basic principle, have improved it and are progressing toward recovery thereby.

Under the capitalistic system activity is governed by the hope of profits. Have we not gone too far in restrictions which have been imposed upon private financial activities in this country? Is not the current reactionary trend in American business due in a large measure to these restrictions?

With profits menaced by threats of arbitrary wage increases and adjustments of working hours, by a variety of taxes, and by general uncertainty as to what new legislative experiments may be tried next, there is little wonder that capital hesitates to commit itself, and that in consequence business and the financial markets lag. Business cannot increase without an increase in private investment. The federal budget will not be near a balance until there is a general countrywide business improvement of much more than modest nature.

The administration must soon realize that continuance of its programs of restrictions upon private financial activities not only cripples chances of business recovery but in that crippling ties up the bag from which comes its principal source of governmental revenue.

MRS. VAN WORMER SUCCUMBS TODAY TO HEART DISEASE

Mrs. Jane Van Wormer, 55, died at the Grande Ronde hospital this morning of heart disease after a short illness, her death coming as a sad shock to her many friends. Funeral services will be announced later. The body is at the Rodgers and Zimmerman mortuary. Mrs. Van Wormer, the wife of B. A. Van Wormer, official at the Mt. Emily Lumber company, was born in Scotland May 30, 1879 and was just 55 years, seven days of age. She and her husband came to La Grande about nine years ago. She also is survived by a brother, David Smart, of Detroit, Mich.

Chief check to supply an additional fund in the city treasury, whereby cheap politicians can be taken care of by salary under the guise of enforcing the law such as setting poor people who sell or give their neighbor a quart of milk or for selling them some fire wood? We are on our way with the N. B. A. unfair competition is what they say. Then here comes the cheapest of all politicians transformed into an officer of the law (the dog catcher). In heaven's name, good people, is established justice being plausibly executed? Wherein one who is financially unable to pay this dog license fee at all is then required to suffer the unholy and brutal penalty of seeing a dog catcher drive away with the old family watch dog to a place of slaughter, with possibly some kiddy's only playmate?

Are we secure in the blessings of life and liberty, the peaceful possession of property and the pursuit of happiness under a law that demands the murder of innocent dumb brutes so that both we and our families by being subject to said law are severely punished, that the city's rulers, may be appeased in their loss of a dog license fee? Is it any wonder that our fine state is sparsely settled, and much of its fertile soil lies untilled, meter with probable clearer weather just ahead.

while our chambers of commerce try persistently to get settlers to come and make their homes in our state? We are told that the voice of the people is supreme. If this be true, I say then put the dog license law up to referendum.

uses in every state. While I come from the east, my interests are not bounded by the Alleghenies or the Mississippi."

Senator Charles L. McNary of Oregon, Republican leader of the senate, is not overly impressed with the selection of Fletcher. "A good man," Senator McNary said of Fletcher, "but not a brilliant selection." He had hoped for a selection, he said, of "an equally good man farther to the west, possessing same and modern views."

Several other western Republicans expressed disappointment.

STEEL STRIKE LOOMS; COAST BREAK HINTED

Seven district longshore delegates and seven steamship company representatives met again today, hoping for a compromise.

PORTLAND, Ore., June 7 (AP)—The steamer North King of the Pacific American Fisheries, the first vessel to leave Portland with cargo loaded with approval of striking longshoremen, sailed from the oceanic terminal here today bound for Alaska with 646 persons aboard.

The sailing of the North King was Portland's participation in the opening of the strike blockade sufficiently to allow Alaskan cannery ships to go north for the season. Others are leaving Puget Sound ports for the far north.

meter with probable clearer weather just ahead.

The baseball field was too wet for the game scheduled for this afternoon but all other events will be given as per schedule, rain or shine. The report is that the race horses are raring to go and the cowboys say they love to ride in the mud. Mr. Bystander reports that this may be true especially when there is no alternative. There is a fine exhibit of P.F.A. and 4-H club stock together with other livestock and officials are busy today with the judging though there will be no announcement of winners until late this afternoon. With better weather a big day is anticipated for tomorrow. The big parade starts at 1:30 o'clock and other events follow in rapid succession, it is announced today.

Reader Assails Dog License Law

To the Editor:
The people of our good city do not expect perfection in the conduct of human government. But they would be within their rights in demanding of our city lawmakers better service which they could render by confining their legislative efforts within the limits prescribed by our national and state constitution. I ask, does the dog license law recently passed, appeal to you as a promotion of the general welfare?
Rather doesn't it promote the welfare of the city's ruling few? It is not the sound of their still but mighty voice demanding through misguided legislation via the dog license law, that the extreme poor be operated on and a $1.00 dog license fee be amputated from their meagre re-
