Murder at Mocking House

BY WALTER C. BROWN

down on a charming photograph that stood on the table. "My wife, Harper—a very clever and beautiful woman."

Sergeant Harper nodded at this rather singular introduction. Rarely had he seen such appealing loveliness as was pictured here. The clear features beautifully modeled, a soft wistfulness about the eyes, curving lips haunted by the ghost of a smile, these remained vividly in his memory.

Pierre Dufresne stood with his back to the fireplace. The slender master of this lofty sky-house, alert, dark, immaculate in his well-cut dinner jacket, looked more than ever the true artist, the connoisseur of wealth and power, as he stood squarely upon his hearth, cigarette in one hand, a balloon glass gracefully balanced in the other.

SERGEANT STEPHEN HARPER was baffled by Dufresne's strange attitude and besides being puzzled he was not entirely comfortable. The evidence of wealth that met the eye everywhere set a barrier to the appraisal of his host's character, made it hard to separate the man from his luxurious background.

Of the fact that there was a real man there, a personality both vivid and complex, there could be no doubt. But ever since Harper had arrived, and no doubt before, Dufresne had been drinking, and drinking with a number of latentness that revealed a sullen purpose.

Perhaps, thought Harper, that was the explanation of Andrews' sour looks as he had hovered over the dinner table. First it had been highballs, and now brandy. Harper had grave doubts as to the wisdom of this mixture, but thus far the only apparent effect these potent drinks had produced was a certain heavy dignity of speech and movement, a heightened glitter of those cynical eyes.

The detective-officer suddenly became aware of his host's counter-scrutiny. The latter's position, with his back to the fire, gave him a decided advantage in any exchange of glances. Harper could see little of his features save the glint of his rimless glasses.

"You'll do, Harper, you'll do, very well indeed," Dufresne pronounced gravely. "You've got the proper mentality for handling a case of this kind. You showed that to me by your very first move—searching this place before assigning your men to their posts."

"That was nothing but the simplest routine procedure," Harper deprecated.

Dufresne twirled the goblet gently in his fingers, looking thoughtfully into its contents. "I'll wager both Markinson and Harry would have accepted my man's word for it that no one could have got in here and hid. The fact that there was no one here makes the point no less important."

Harper nodded. Perhaps he should have felt more flattered by the good opinion of this man of power, but he could not shake off that uncomfortable feeling that pricked the back of his mind. There was something about this assignment that was incongruous, a feeling that destined events had already decided to take the course of perversity. Somehow, the power of the police marshaled against this anonymous threat seemed futile, a hollow parade of force. Yet it could not be reckoned so by any practical standard.

"Naturally," Dufresne answered shortly, and in what struck the detective as a peculiar tone. His host rose and went to a table near the hearth. A flood of soft light poured

YOUR GROCER HAS THIS SUNNY WAY TO BETTER HEALTH

Check Common Constipation with a Delicious Cereal

Food has a lot to do with how you feel and how you look. For instance, you need plenty of "bulk" with your meals to avoid the risk of common constipation.

This ailment frequently causes headaches, loss of appetite and energy. Yet, in most cases, it can be overcome pleasantly and safely by eating a delicious cereal.

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN furnishes "bulk" in convenient and concentrated form. Laboratory tests show the "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is safe and effective. In fact, it is much like that found in leafy vegetables.

Within the body, the fiber of ALL-BRAN absorbs moisture, and forms a soft mass. Gently, this clears out the intestinal wastes.

In addition, ALL-BRAN provides vitamin B and iron.

Isn't this sunny way better than taking patent medicines—so often harmful? Two tablespoonsful of ALL-BRAN daily are usually sufficient. Chronic cases with each meal. If seriously ill, see your doctor. ALL-BRAN makes no claim to be a "cure-all."

Enjoy ALL-BRAN as a cereal, or cook into appetizing recipes. Be sure you get Kellogg's ALL-BRAN. It contains much more needed "bulk" than part-bran products. In the red-and-purpl package. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.
