All things work together for good to them that love God. If God be for us, who can be against us? Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us.—Romans 8: 28, 31, 35, 37.

CODES WILL NOT WORK WITHOUT CONSCIENCE

These present times that bitterly pierce all hearts in this broad land have been met by a president of good will and fine courage. He tells us that poverty must be banished, that children shall have the inalienable rights of childhood, that men shall not exploit their fellow men, that justice must be done, that strength must be shared with weakness, that every one is entitled to a happy life. These objectives are as good as goodness itself, they are a modernized translation of the second great commandment that a man must love his neighbor as he loves himself.

"But methods will not operate without motives, codes will not function without conscience; there is a first great commandment, that man must love God with all his heart, mind, and strength, and the second commandment utterly falls without the first. There can be no durable progress until the God of the hills is sought to rebuild the society of the plains. The skies pour down righteousness while the earth floods itself with light, the skies pour down righteousness while government tries to operate mechanisms with secondary causes; the skies pour down righteousness while men run to and fro, crying, "Lo here!" and "Lo there!"

"Many of the people of America are bewildered, especially the Christian people. They wish to be loyal, but they find poor inspiration to be loyal by their being profanely "cracked down upon" or their being advised by a national leader to seek their comforts in "wine, women, and song." They are missing the things that men live by and are saddened. They know that only as men have spiritualized motives, can their actions be a means for the permanent recovery of reality. They know that the constants and constructives of society always have their sources in the spirit. They know that true statesmanship is to discern the way God is going and then to clear the way for his advance. There are substitutes for God, but there is no equivalent."—Excerpt from baccalaureate sermon of Pres. Carl Gregg Doney of Willamette University.

Murder at MOCKING HOUSE
BY WALTER C. BROWN.

Chapter Eight
CRIME SCENE

LET us go back a short time and follow the adventures of Bandit Chaser No. 18.

With Hillery driving and Connally calling the turns, the speedy little car headed for Officer Hamill's territory. They had to drive slowly, for the headlights could not cut very deeply into the teeth of the storm and the automatic windshield wiper just about held its own against the fiercely-driven snow.

Connally kept a sharp lookout, but in vain. At every street intersection Hillery sounded the whirring siren call, familiar to every patrolman's ear as the signal of the "Flying Squad."

Hillery brought the car to a halt beside the call-box from which Hamill should have reported. It bore a conical cap of snow, leaning crazily on one side from the force of the wind. All around was a white wilderness, inches deep, and galling steadily. Unbroken in its smooth, wind-drifted reaches, only a gentle bulge showed where the curbstone was set.

Connally borrowed the heavy flashlight from the car's equipment and got out of the machine. The policeman turned on the beam and flashed it in a circle. Here and there were unmistakable ridges and filled-in hollows which roughly outlined the imprints a shoe had left earlier in the storm.

By going a little farther afield he could distinguish two sets of the old tracks, presumably made by Hamill's coming to the pillar for his earlier "pull" and his subsequent departure.

There were a few tire-marks in the street, but no other tracks along the sidewalk, and, having struck the scent, Connally automatically started along the trail. Hillery drove the car at a snail's pace on a parallel line. For two blocks they continued so, when, upon crossing an intersecting street, Connally found that he had lost the trail.

Retracing his steps, he found that a radical alteration had taken place in Hamill's course. The old tracks showed that Hamill had crossed about a third of the width of the street, when something had induced him to set off at a sharp angle. The almost obliterated footprints led along the intersecting street.

The trailers followed this tangent, but had not proceeded very far before they became aware of a booming sound. Puzzled, they came to a halt, awaiting a repetition of the noise. When it came again, they recognized the sound at once. The front door of one of the houses near the far end of the block was unlatched and the wind was banging it to and fro with thunderous force.

SOME prompting at instinct induced Connally to break into a run. He pulled up, panting, at the entrance to the front lawn, a flat, desolate level of virgin snow, bounded by low hedges and skeleton bushes. The flashlight showed that the footprints had turned in there. It also picked out the bronze numerals, "34," on one of the stone pillars at the gate. The massive front door, after its flail boomings, stood open invitingly, due to a fall in the wind.

Hillery got out of the car, and, side by side, the two policemen walked up the path and scanned the front of the house, a three-story stone mansion standing in its own grounds. There was no light, no sign of life anywhere about the place. The hall beyond the yawning door was merely a black cavity leading into the unknown.

"I guess we followed the wrong tracks," Hillery suggested; "these are just from somebody going home."

"What about that door?" Connally countered. "People don't leave their front doors banging in a storm. We'd better look into this. Come on!"

Connally pulled off a glove and pressed the electric bell button, holding it down with his finger. There was no answering sound. After waiting a suitable time, Connally stepped gingerly across the threshold. The inner vestibule doors were closed.

He turned the knob and peered into a still deeper void of darkness. "Hello! Hello!" he shouted, and

STOCKS DISPLAY ADDED STRENGTH

NEW YORK, June 19 (AP)—Profit taking was the rule in stocks today, with the "good news" out on the retirement of congress for the summer and most traders figuring on a technical reaction. A few issues displayed resistance, but the majority were off fractionally to around 2 points. The close was heavy. Transfers approximated 825,000 shares.

CERISE SLIPPERS WORN WITH SATIN GOWN

PARIS (AP)—Dull cerise satin slippers give a striking note of color to an ivory satin gown with a racy cast which the Baronne Harry d'Estange wears this season. The gown, designed by Vionnet, is fashioned with a full skirt and a simple decollete from the back of which break two long draperies falling to the hem.

effective guaranteeing bank deposits to a maximum of $2,500 with a permanent system increasing that amount to follow after one year. The temporary plan was subsequently continued for an additional year with the maximum increased to $5,000.

With the exception of the first, emergency banking act, the passage of all these measures was attended by vigorous opposition from conservative elements in congress, with the fight centering especially upon the Thomas amendment, it brought out the first organized Republican opposition to the Roosevelt measures.

The interim between the adjournment of the special session and the beginning of the regular session which ended last night found much of this legislation carried into effect, and also saw several experimental administration efforts to make money more plentiful and increase commodity prices.

which he has been elected.

Mr. Hanford is president of the Old Timers club which is sponsoring the celebration in La Grande next month, and is actively interested in the celebration.

He will assume the place on the school board which has been held during the last two years by Ray Buell, but who was not a candidate for reelection.

CELEBRATION HERE WILL RIVAL BEST

La Grande two days previous to the start of the celebration and with delegates planning to remain here during the festivities. Delegates will be here to this convention from the eleven western states and three western provinces of Canada. It is the first time such a convention has been held in a city of less than 100,000 population. Mr. Humphreys told his listeners.

Fred Reed, commander of the local post of the American Legion and heading the committee of the celebration in charge of carnival, drum corps contest and fireworks, told of the securing of a large carnival concert to show here during celebration week, of the acceptance of drum corps in this and surrounding states to be here for parade and contest and gave details of an hour's fireworks display in connection with the drum corps show.

Details of presentation of the pageant, in which over 1,000 persons will participate and which will, following some historical preliminary or background, show the development of transportation from earliest infancy, were explained by A. W. Nelson, chairman of the committee in charge of that part of the three-day affair.

A suggestion of Dr. J. L. Ingle, member of the school board, that the high school athletic field just completed with some $12,000 PWA funds be hereafter known as the "stadium," met with approval of all present.

MRS. KAAPCKE TRANSFERRED TO WENATCHEE

Mrs. Ophelia Kaapcke left last night for Wenatchee, Wash., where she has been transferred by the Western Union to a full time position. Mrs. Kaapcke has been a resident of La Grande for the last ten years and during that time has been employed in a part time position as telegraph operator. Her son, Bernard, will leave tomorrow morning by stage and join his mother at their new home. An-

THE L & L DRUG CO.

Have Picnic—Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Masterton, Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Sherwood, Mr. and Mrs. Elliot Austin and Mabel, Mrs. Catherine Willett, Mrs. Lucy Graham and Miss Lee spent Wednesday picnicking at the Buckles ranger station which is located near the Buckles road. The location of Buckles road is well known to most of Union county residents. It being an old one and having been built through to Bingham Springs way back in 1868.

The picnickers ate their lunch at the picnic grounds and afterwards visited with a couple of friends, Ranger Carlson, who is located at the lookout and Mrs. Arch Willett, who is cooking for the crew of men working on the road. The party reports the road will soon be completed to the Toll Gate.

Get Marriage Licenses—A marriage license was issued yesterday from the office of County Clerk Kenneth McCormick, to John Boyd Kiser and Rose Nelson, both of Union. A license was also issued on Saturday to Vernon E. Hays of La Grande, and Macy Elizabeth Howe, of Baker. This makes a total of five licenses which were issued on Saturday.
