Pocket Veto Rule Aids in Smoothing Ruffled Feathers

By Herbert Plummer

WASHINGTON — There is a reason why President Roosevelt introduced an innovation in pocket veto practices for certain legislation enacted in the closing days of the seventy-third congress.

He and the administration leaders in congress were anxious to bring the session to a close. In their anxiety to get the senators and representatives out of town, the way was paved for passage of "pet" bills as well as other legislation never intended by the administration to become law.

No one, probably the authors of these bills themselves, expected White House approval would be given. Once through congress, however, their responsibility was at an end.

From a personal political standpoint it made little difference whether the president signed the bills.

Messages With Veto

There was, however, a sort of gentleman's agreement with the president that he wouldn't permit these bills to die without giving some reason why they were objectionable.

That's why, in so many instances of White House disapproval of bills sent up in the closing days of the session, two and three sentence messages accompanied the veto.

The "pocket veto" is one of the most interesting things in the scheme of American government. Neither law or custom decrees a president why he permits a bill to die without his signature.

It was an accepted privilege of the chief executive to pocket legislation after adjournment of congress until

German Climbers Meet a Tragedy

SIMLA, India, July 17 (AP) — A British news agency dispatch from Calcutta said today disaster had overtaken an expedition of veteran German mountain climbers seeking to scale Mount Nanga Parbat, 26,629-foot virgin peak in the Western Himalayas.

Willys Merkl, leader of the party, Ulrich Wieland and Dr. Weizenbach have been missing for several days in the midst of a terrific blizzard, the report said.
