

WESTERN STATES TAKING LEAD IN TAX BURDEN CUTS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mid-western and western states have taken the lead over other sections in the movement seeking to encourage home construction through easing of the tax burden on real and tangible property.

With national attention now concentrated on the new federal home building program, the entire property tax problem probably will figure prominently in the fall elections of many states.

The tax burden always is an important item to be considered before building a home, and numerous organizations of property owners and the National Association of Real Estate Boards contend the levy on real estate now is so high it discourages construction of homes.

A survey of the local and state taxation committee of the association of real estate board shows seven states have over-all limitation on property taxes, either by law or by constitution; 21 states have statutory or constitutional limits on real estate taxes; eight have no real estate tax for state purposes; while six have no limitation of any kind on the amount of taxes which may be levied against real estate for state, municipal or county purposes.

The committee's report said unusual activity in the mid-western and western states looking toward trimming down on taxes on real property. The findings included:

Oregon: Initiative petition now in circulation for constitutional amendment. Amendment designed to reduce over-all limit successively over period of years until 1 1/2 per cent limitation fixed in 1940.

Washington: Active campaign to reenact statutory 40 mill limitation (on 50 per cent valuation). Hope thus to establish principle of limitation eventually making it constitutional.
