A LESSON ON PUBLIC MANNERS

Much as we may deplore the philosophy of the Russian Reds, we must admit that the lads who wear their shirts outside of their pants do get ideas now and then. The latest is a stunt to teach the proletariat how to behave itself in public.

On the edge of Moscow there is a vast amusement park—the Park of Culture and Rest, a sort of glorified Coney Island. Soviet authorities have been bothered by people who get drunk there, commit acts of rowdyism and in other ways disturb the peace. So they have started putting up life-sized wax figures of the offenders in public places, with signs telling just what the guilty parties did. And while this might tend to make the park look queer, it does seem to be an idea with possibilities.

You can see for yourself how it would work in this country. On the edge of the picnic grounds, for instance, you could put up a nice effigy of a banjo-eyed moron and hang from its neck a sign reading something like this: "Here's Luke McGlook, who scatters paper, banana peelings, partly consumed doughnuts and cigar butts all over the place where people eat picnic dinners. Luke is a dope."

And then, on some bench along the path, you could have the figures of a pasty-faced sheik and his red-fingernailed sweetie, with a sign along this line: "These half-wits think a public place like this a swell place to engage in necking. They have been locked up."

And, by the roadside, a cigar-chewing maniac with a steering wheel in his hands and a sign like this: "This is Joe Doakes, who thinks any speed below 50 miles an hour is too slow, and who specializes in crashing traffic lights. He has been liquidated."

All of this probably sounds prety odd. Yet it is exactly the sort of thing that is being tried out in the Moscow park, and it is far from being the dizziest idea the Muscovites have had lately. Give a few of these public pests a chance to see what they look like to the innocent bystander, and they might start getting wise to themselves. And if they did, our parks and highways and recreation spots would be much pleasanter places.

Murder at MOCKING HOUSE

BY WALTER C. BROWN

SYNOPSIS: Although Sergeant Harper has proved that the stranger and the policeman found dead in Pierre Dufresne's house were murdered, and did not kill each other as the evidence appeared to prove, he can neither identify the murdered stranger nor show how the murderer escaped from the house without leaving marks in the snow. Dufresne, although he has an apparently perfect alibi, has aroused Harper's suspicion.

Chapter 33

HARPER'S THEORY

"AFTERWARD, Dufresne's alibi was so confoundedly air-tight that it annoyed me," Harper continued. "But how to get around it? I had that idea in mind when I left here right after the discovery of the bodies and dashed back to the Asterlitz—but there he was, dead drunk, and our own men on guard."

He shook his head. "That's a tough nut to crack. I guess we'll have to look elsewhere for the murderer. There are two vital questions we'll have to answer before we can pin it on anybody. The first one is, Who is the dead man? Certainly the man lived somewhere, ate his meals somewhere, bought things, and met people to some degree. You can't live in any city without some personal contacts.

"The second question is, How did the murderer escape from this house without leaving tracks in the snow? Each is a vital question and we've got to supply the answers."

"The newspapers will help us establish his identity," LaFlert prophesied. "With all the publicity we're getting, something is bound to come out. But the question of the escape through the snow we'll have to solve ourselves. Do you suppose we could possibly be wrong about that? Maybe the murderer hid and didn't leave until later."

Harper smoked in silence. "It's got me guessing, but I'm convinced it was done. That's where the murderer showed his devilish ingenuity, picking his time and arranging the circumstances so that it was nearly impossible that his presence at the scene of the crime should ever be suspected. We've been over every inch of the house half a dozen times.

No hiding-place for anything larger than a cat has escaped attention. Add to this the presence of the Dufresnes, the Croydons, the servants, and you see how impossible it would be for an outsider to escape notice.

"I can't conceive of one outsider coming into this house to shoot and kill another outsider. That wouldn't be reasonable. If you take that line you've got to explain why any one in this household should be moved to cover up the evidence, to the hiding of the gun power."

"No, every indication points to the murderer as being among those present. There's some trick to the escape and we've got to fathom it. We know from the evidence in hand that there were positive shootings in the room between some one from this house and our man of mystery. The killing was carefully planned, with every detail worked out in advance."

"You think the impression was arranged for by the killer?" LaFlerty demanded incredulously.

"I THINK the presence of snow was essential to the whole scheme," Harper replied, with pain. "Almost there was some grim relationship between the person who shot him, say, a blackmailer and his victim. The killer has determined on murder as the only way out. But that murder must be made to look like suicide.

"For the past three days the Weather Bureau has been reporting a blizzard sweeping the Middle West and warning that we may have to catch the tail of it. The killer saw the big chance. A commonplace device and unsuspected power, with snow all around it, and no prints in the snow. That person had only eight hours to figure out a way to turn that unwanted snow into an unavoidable alibi."

Harper rapped down the ashes in his pipe. "By the way, you haven't said a word about your check-up in the nearby homes. I suppose it was a wash-out?"

LaFlerty scowled disgustedly. "I wouldn't gather two cents' worth of evidence," he growled.

"Did you leave all the lights?"

"Every one in the block, back alley, in the street, and the light over the back of the house."

Harper uttered profanity. "Everything suggests an inside job and yet we can't believe that for many reasons. What has passed here this night is almost as plain to me as though I had been sitting behind the door. The trouble is that the murderer's face is just a blank and without any one of our eight faces could fit that space."

"You mean you've got the action pieced together?"

"Just that. Follow this closely and see if it doesn't cover all the known points. The masquerader arrived at the rendezvous ahead of time. The storm is in its early stages and he would not want to leave plain tracks around the place. He went to Dufresne's room, shaved, changed into one of Dufresne's dress suits and put on his disguise."

"Why the disguise?" was LaFlerty's terse interruption.

"I don't know," Harper admitted. "That is some evidence of mania. I am dealing with physical movements now, not motives. The masquerader made himself comfortable. He got out the liquor decanters, perhaps filled them, lit the hearth fire, and sat back to enjoy a drink and a smoke. With the snow coming down thick and the double curtains drawn, it was safe to light the fire and the candles."

"Why bother with candles?" LaFlerty questioned again.

"Ah, they explain one of those odd points that are so troublesome. You remember that the electric current was cut off at the switch? Mrs. Whitmore didn't do that. I figure that every time those persons met here at night they threw that switch. Why? Because if the Whitmores, or any one else, came back unexpectedly, they could not make a light. Hence the use of candles."

LAFFERTY approved with a nod of the head.

"Then the killer came to the rendezvous. The snow was not yet deep enough to retain the tracks very long. They sat in this room and talked. There was drinking and smoking. At the pre-determined moment a gun was whipped out and bang! the masquerader went out like a candle.

"And now the murderer had to work swiftly, because any interruption would be fatal. The killer needed more light, for nothing must be overlooked. The fire was stirred up to increase the visibility in the room. Unknown to the killer, a shower of sparks went dancing up the chimney.

"How that pistol shot in a closed room must have sounded like a cannon. With the sound still ringing in his—or her ears," Harper shrugged with a smile, "the thought came—that any one heard it? The killer rose to a rear window to look toward the garage. All quiet there. He went to the front window. Damnation! A policeman is approaching. The murderer thought the shot had been heard and is momentarily thrown into a panic. Wants to die? Nonsense. Himself had carried it at the time.

"The killer's first thought was that the game was up. Talk the affair out of sticking around? That opening would be remembered whenever the body was found.

"Then came the inspiration and Hamill was dragged from that moment. This cold-blooded killer decided to make the best of his break. He opened the front door to Hamill and behind him inside, Hamill, no doubt recognizing the killer as one of the regular household, was incapacitated and incapacitated. You remember we examined why Hamill were directly in the door to the front door threshold of recognized and why he wasn't shot down on the threshold or in the hall?

"The reason was that the killer instantly assigned the value to his part of having the policeman die at the proper spot. Shot Hamill and viewed the person who opened the door to him is definitely would have had the first ready and reports of his superior officers show that he was not the type to be unduly fastidious if there was the least chance to be wary. To the mind his death is his most in the attempt arrangement that more person in this house did the job.

"So the stage was set. Dufresne's gun had been used to kill the first man, then the dead man's own gun was used to kill Hamill. The original murder gun was put back in Dufresne's drawer. The gun used to kill Hamill was wiped clean and placed in the masquerader's dead hands.

"Then the killer dug the .41 bullet from the wallpapering and used the five-cents to hold it in the fixture, but it wouldn't work. He went down into the cellar, found the roll of the carpet, and took one that from Hamill's gun through it.

"The fact that he thought of the idea under the stress of a good piece of him the following bullet shows rare executive familiarity with the house. He carried Hamill's bullet upstairs and dropped it in position."

Tomorrow: Harper suggests the answer to the mystery of the missing gun.

LEGION JUNIORS HELD HITLESS BY HOOD RIVER LAD

The La Grande American Legion Junior league team ran into no-hit pitching at Hood River yesterday which, coupled with heavy slugging on the part of the Central Oregon team, sent the boys back home last night on the short end of a 16 to 1 score in the district playoff. As a result, Hood River will play in the state finals at Astoria later this month.

In fielding, the boys coached by Raymond O. Williams turned in a better performance than the Hood River lads, but Ingle's stants were too much for the local hitters. Ingle, Hood River pitcher, is a graduate of Carl Mays' baseball school.

Koyle started for La Grande as pitcher and was relieved later in the game by Blackman. Walden caught throughout the contest.

In spite of the loss yesterday, the team had one of the most successful seasons in local history, with only one other junior league team here reaching the semi-finals. That them, playing The Dalles in the playoff, also lost.

Housecleaning In Market Suggested

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6 (AP) — A senate committee suggested a housecleaning today to purge Wall street's investment banking of "abuses." The committee declared banking houses used "shocking" and "scandalous" methods in selling the public billions of dollars of securities, many of which have become almost worthless since 1929.

Black Scot Wins Canadian Open

TORONTO, Aug. 6 (AP) — For the sixteenth successive year, Canada's million-dollaires have permitted the Dominion's open golf championship to slip across the border.

Tommy Armour, the "Black Scot" from Chicago, put together rounds of 69-73-71-74, for a 72-hole total of 287 to win the title Saturday and preserve intact the string of United States victories which began in 1919.

Deficit for school year 1933-34 on estimated receipts as per this report	16 854.22
Difference	$32 500.78

Note.—Most of this difference is due to the fact that in most cases the estimated receipts for the year 1933-34 were much lower than the 1932-33 estimates and the tax levy was lowered and the last receipts were considerably greater.

'Just On A Quiet Vacation'

Shunning the limelight and newsmen with the plea "We're just on a vacation trip," Mrs. Franklin D. SOLONS WALLOP PORTLAND FOUR STRAIGHT GAMES

By the Associated Press

Although it doesn't mean a thing in the Pacific Coast league pennant fight, the weekend comeback of Sacramento verges on the miraculous.

Portland up and smacked Sacramento three straight and clamped the Senators into the league cellar only to have them take four games in a row and the series. Saturday Leo Cutenberg blasted out a pair of homers in the opener and Frenchy Bordagaray one in the nightcap to give the Sacramentans a twin bill, 10-4, 6-2. The McNeely men kept it it yesterday and polished off the Beavers twice more, 5-3, 7-1.

The three leaders maintained a fast weekend clip, with Seattle registering the only gain. After watching the Tribe increase his boys 11-8 in the Saturday night opener, Manager Ray Brubaker of Oakland grabbed a bat in the seventh inning of the second game and rammed the ball over the fence with one aboard to win 5-3. The Indians came back to whip the Oaks in the Sunday doubleheader, 15-12, 6-4.

Los Angeles trimmed Hollywood 8-4 Saturday and divided Sunday's doubleheader 10-7 and 4-3 to hold onto first place and take the series 3-2.

The terse Metropol Gabby Street of the Missions lingers in San Francisco limits apparently was still there over the weekend as the Reds trounced the Seals 7-4 Saturday and split the Sunday bargain bill, 1-2, 9-2.

WOODBURN IN FINALS

WOODBURN, Aug. 6 (AP) — The Woodburn American Legion Junior baseball team won the right to enter the state championship finals at Astoria as it captured the sectional championship from Milwaukie with a 7 to 2 win here Sunday.

ROSEBURG JUNIORS WIN

ROSEBURG, Ore., Aug. 6 (AP)—Roseburg won the Southern Oregon American Legion Junior league baseball title here Sunday defeating Klamath Falls 6 to 2 for the second straight victory of the three game series.

INFLATION "BUG" CHECKS DECLINE

NEW YORK, Aug. 6 (AP)—The inflation bug seemed into the stock market today and checked a rather sharp decline which had depressed several issues to new lows for the year.

Most of the early loss was regained, as non-ferrous metal issues rose 1 to 3 points in a quiet market. The close was irregular. Transfers approximated 800,000 shares.

TORRANCE HEAVES SHOT OUT 57 FEET

OSLO, Aug. 6 (AP) — The 16-pound world record for the shot put rested firm in the giant hands of Jack Torrance, huge Louisiana State university track man, today, safe even from the attacks of his closest rival, John Lyman, Stanford veteran.

Torrance twice broke the listed record of 53 feet, 7¾ inches held by Z. Heljasz of Poland, in a meet here yesterday despite a rain soaked field that left soggy footing. On his fourth heave Torrance, member of a touring American track and field team, sailed the shot 1.56 inches beyond the old record and on the fifth try bettered all past performances with a heave of 57 feet, 5/32 of an inch.
