United Air Lines To Receive Fast Planes Shortly

SEATTLE (Special)—Something a speed which will make possible even further reductions in air travel between the Pacific northwest and the west coast and the east. 10 new high-speed twin-engine transport planes will be delivered to United Air Lines shortly by the Boeing Airplane company.

The new carriers will be equipped with geared, supercharged Wasp engines and three-bladed controllable pitch Hamilton standard propellers as contrasted with the direct-drive Wasp and two-bladed controllable pitch propellers used on the original transports delivered to United Air Lines last year. A considerable increase in speed is expected, although performance figures will not be known until flight tests are full scale this month.

Elapsed travel time between the Pacific Northwest and New York has been reduced approximately one-third since United Air Lines began operating over this route.

Portland Stops Seattle 11 to 7; L. A. Team Wins

By The Associated Press
Full to prove base hits still will ball games and the air lights don't always give the advantage by the pitcher.

Cub Coast Farm Had B. Johnson, Gave Him Away

LOS ANGELES (AP)—In the midst of the Chicago Cubs' battle for the National league pennant, Manager Charles Grimm may have a few days' respite to consider what might have been for Bob Johnson, Connie Mack's latest home run sensation, who once tried out with Los Angeles.

Johnson, a Glendale, Calif. farm boy, showed up in the light of 1928 to take his first big league baseball with the Angels. He amazed the management by hitting the ball over the left field fence frequently, but he couldn't hit a curve.

Angry "Dad" Berman had for a while been "Bobby" Weir, the former pitcher, James Moeck and Forrest Smith. All of whom later were graduated to the big leagues, so Johnson didn't last long.

In fact, the Los Angeles management had given Johnson to Art Cheney, who was managing the Philadelphia club of the Western league. The last year Portland purchased him and he improved so much the Philadelphia Athletics bought him in 1932.

GROWING PAINS
By Bewick Peters Church
Tommy frequently woke up in the night wailing that his leg hurt. His mother, who objected to what he considered the imaginary pains of childhood, would call them "growing pains."

You will probably be half an inch taller by morning," she would insist laughingly, "so go to sleep and stop thinking about it."

But Tommy could not go to sleep for the pain which old-fashioned parents called growing pains is a very real thing calculated to put sleep and comfort out of the question. Eventually a doctor was called in who diagnosed the trouble as rheumatic and prescribed the removal of Tommy's tonsils as a cure. The operation was performed and in times the rheumatic symptoms disappeared.

The cure is not always so easy and tonics are not always the cause of the trouble. But unquestionably the child who complains of growing pains should at once be put under a physician's care, for his rheumatic symptoms may point to a focus of infection that is poisoning his entire system. No child is apt to wake up from a sound sleep complaining of a pain which does not exist and to try to quiet him with jokes about an added half inch of growth is cruel.

The best immediate cure for the pain is dry heat. A woolen shirt or even a woolen stocking wrapped about the aching leg will ease the pain and allow the sufferer to go to sleep. But the cure is only a palliative, and by no means reaches the seat of the trouble. Rheumatism incurred for may develop into a chronic condition which will in time cripple the child or cause a serious heart condition. The cure of such consequences may be impossible, whereas prevention is usually a simple matter.
