final fight against Japan, saying, "We must never forget that beyond all lurks Japan, harrassed and failing, but still a people of a hundred million, for whose warriors death has few terrors."

Says U. S. Saved Britain

He paid this tribute to the United States:

"Ever since the United States entered the war have I had the slightest doubt but that we should be saved and that we only had to do our duty in order to win."

Churchill, in reviewing the course of the war, also praised the Soviet nation and army, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, the British joint chiefs of staff, and Field Marshals Sir Harold Alexander and Bernard L. Montgomery.

The prime minister disclosed that the Germans, in addition to their V-1 and V-2 attacks on England, planned to launch long-range artillery against London.

"Only just in time did the allied armies blast the viper in his nest," he said. "Otherwise the autumn of 1944, to say nothing of 1945 might have seen London as shattered as Berlin."

Validity of Local Budget Law Is Attacked in Suit

SALEM, Ore., May 14 (UP)—The so-called "local budget law" of the recent legislature, signed by both presiding officers and the governor, and now being included in the session laws, is not the bill as passed by the legislature, it was claimed today by the Oregon Business and Tax Research, Inc.

The group has filed a suit to enjoin Secretary of State Robert S. Farrell, jr., from including the measure in the 1945 laws.

The tax organization claims that a conference report, adopted by both houses, was left out of the engrossed bill by inadvertence, and that the lack changes the import of the law.

This is the first action challenging the validity of a 1945 law, but the bill is not being attacked as to purpose or constitutionality, according to F. H. Young, manager of the tax group.

The bill, (HB468) which carried the emergency clause and is now law, proposed to set up "cash working accounts" to tide over local budget accounts from one taxing period to the next.

"The question for the courts," Young said, "is whether a bill signed by the governor and presiding officers of the two legislative branches, is the law of Oregon, or whether the measure as enacted, as shown by the legislature's journal, is the law of the state."

Wilbur Henderson, who acted as legal adviser to the governor during the session, has been retained to bring the suit.

Move to Clear Up Presidential Status Planned

president and vice-president die. This never has happened in American history. As the law stands, if President Truman should die now, Secretary of State Edward R. Stettinius, jr., would become president. Under this system, Farley said, a vice-president who has succeeded to the presidency can arbitrarily name his own successor merely by appointing him secretary of state.

Many Difficulties Seen

Monroney said that additional difficulties would arise immediately if a secretary of state ever became president. Jurists disagree, he said, as to whether or not the cabinet officer next in line would be the new president's own secretary of state or the secretary of the treasury in the dead vice-president's cabinet.

"And I could go for hours citing other examples of ambiguities and blind spots in the present setup," Monroney said. "We definitely must do something about it, or some future congress will find itself in an awful jam."

The commission Monroney proposes would be composed of 12 members — four appointed by the chief justice of the supreme court, four by the president, two by the speaker of the house and two by the president of the senate.

Various Factors Urgent

The bill would authorize the commission to study the general problem and in particular to determine:

1. Who should become president upon the death of the president and vice-president. In answering this question, Monroney said, the commission could recommend a complete revision of the present succession system.

2. Who should decide when a president is unable to perform the duties of his office. The constitution provides that the vice-president shall become the president in case of the death or "disability" of the president. But there is no procedure for determining this "disability."

3. Who should become president if both the president-elect and vice-president-elect should die between election time and inauguration day.

4. What should be done if a major party presidential candidate dies before the election.

5. Whether the present system of electing the president is adequate.

Industrial Center Of Nagoya Fired By Superforts of flak was attributed to the fact that flames and smoke probably knocked out ground batteries.

The B-29 armada — biggest of the war — deluged Nagoya, Japan's main aircraft manufacturing center and third largest city, with more than 500,750 fire bombs at the rate of 40 tons a minute for nearly an hour and a half.

A Japanese communique admitted fires still were burning five hours after the start of the raid, but insisted that "most" had been quelled. It said 400 B-29's participated, of which eight had been shot down and nine damaged.

The attack exceeded in weight most raids made by the American eighth air force and RAF against Germany. It underlined official warnings that Japan faced ever greater destruction than the shattered reich unless she surrendered.

Radio Tokyo said another huge American air armada of nearly 1,000 carrier planes was raiding southern Japan for the second straight day, apparently concentrating on bases from which Japanese suicide planes have been attacking American shipping off Okinawa.
