

Lee G. Miller

Men With Rifles Bear Brunt of Winning War

By LEE G. MILLER

WITH THE 25th DIVISION AT BALETE PASS, Luzon — (By Wireless) — "I firmly believe he would have been head of the army someday," said Maj. Gen. Charles L. Mullins, Jr., commanding general of this division.

He was talking about his assistant division commander, Brig. Gen. "Dusty" Dalton who was killed by a Jap sniper.

"I was planning to recommend that he be given a division," the general said. "I don't know of any man in service with more tactical brilliance or administrative acumen."

General Dalton won a silver star with an oakleaf cluster, and a bronze star.

He had been a general only briefly. Until March he was a colonel, commanding the 11st regiment, which he took over during the Guadalcanal campaign, and General Mullins said he had made it a regiment as good as any in the army.

General Dalton was 35. He was graduated from West Point in 1913. His wife who writes poetry under her maiden name, Katherine Starbird, is the daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. A. A. Starbird. She lives in Burlington, Vt.

I had a long talk with General Dalton in his tent the day before he was killed, and I was impressed with his keenness. He obviously did a lot of thinking.

He was talking about the doughboys, and he was full of praise for them.

"The dozer operators and the medics and a lot of others do a magnificent job," he said. "But it's the rifleman who has to go in there against the machine guns."

"A dozer operator has an immediate sense of accomplishment. So does the medic who helps a wounded man. A rifleman has to take a hill—just why, he hardly knows—and when it's taken what's he got? Just another hill ahead of him."

"Ernie Pyle was dead right when he said a soldier's war is just a hundred yards or so on each side of him. He doesn't see the big picture. And he wants to go home."

"A man who has been fighting this long has seen friends killed and he is tired and he figures he has about run out his chances. But he has to take another hill. And he takes it."

The general thought the correspondents had a great responsibility to try to make people back home understand how things are out here.

He mentioned the phrase "mopping up" which sometimes gives people the wrong idea of a rough operation like this at Balete Pass.

"It's a correct phrase militarily," he said. "You break the enemy strategically and the decision is won, but the job remains of defeating strong enemy remnants. That's mopping up, and in using the terms the army doesn't mean to imply any lack of ruggedness."

General Dalton was a disciplinarian. He discouraged officers from addressing men by their first names.

"When an officer gets too familiar with his men," he said, "he becomes hesitant about ordering a dangerous mission. He is likely to make a request instead of issuing an order. But a soldier doesn't like that. He doesn't want to take the responsibility of sending himself into danger. For one thing he feels it's throwing down his family back home. He wants an officer to make the decision. There's not much volunteering in the army, and I'm against it. Men want to be told what to do."

General Dalton was able and willing to do anything he asked his men to do, General Mullins said. "And he could do it better than any of them," he added.

General Dalton liked the troops and they liked him. He told me: "When I need a little bucking up I go up there"—he pointed off through the rain and mist to the front lines—"and talk to the men with the rifles."

General Dalton won a silver star with an oakleaf cluster, and a bronze star.

He had been a general only briefly. Until March he was a colonel, commanding the 11st regiment, which he took over during the Guadalcanal campaign, and General Mullins said he had made it a regiment as good as any in the army.

General Dalton was 35. He was graduated from West Point in 1913. His wife who writes poetry under her maiden name, Katherine Starbird, is the daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. A. A. Starbird. She lives in Burlington, Vt.

I had a long talk with General Dalton in his tent the day before he was killed, and I was impressed with his keenness. He obviously did a lot of thinking.

He was talking about the doughboys, and he was full of praise for them.

"The dozer operators and the medics and a lot of others do a magnificent job," he said. "But it's the rifleman who has to go in there against the machine guns."

"A dozer operator has an immediate sense of accomplishment. So does the medic who helps a wounded man. A rifleman has to take a hill—just why, he hardly knows—and when it's taken what's he got? Just another hill ahead of him."

"Ernie Pyle was dead right when he said a soldier's war is just a hundred yards or so on each side of him. He doesn't see the big picture. And he wants to go home."

"A man who has been fighting this long has seen friends killed and he is tired and he figures he has about run out his chances. But he has to take another hill. And he takes it."

The general thought the correspondents had a great responsibility to try to make people back home understand how things are out here.

He mentioned the phrase "mopping up" which sometimes gives people the wrong idea of a rough operation like this at Balete Pass.

"It's a correct phrase militarily," he said. "You break the enemy strategically and the decision is won, but the job remains of defeating strong enemy remnants. That's mopping up, and in using the terms the army doesn't mean to imply any lack of ruggedness."

General Dalton was a disciplinarian. He discouraged officers from addressing men by their first names.

"When an officer gets too familiar with his men," he said, "he becomes hesitant about ordering a dangerous mission. He is likely to make a request instead of issuing an order. But a soldier doesn't like that. He doesn't want to take the responsibility of sending himself into danger. For one thing he feels it's throwing down his family back home. He wants an officer to make the decision. There's not much volunteering in the army, and I'm against it. Men want to be told what to do."

General Dalton was able and willing to do anything he asked his men to do, General Mullins said. "And he could do it better than any of them," he added.

General Dalton liked the troops and they liked him. He told me: "When I need a little bucking up I go up there"—he pointed off through the rain and mist to the front lines—"and talk to the men with the rifles."

General Dalton won a silver star with an oakleaf cluster, and a bronze star.

He had been a general only briefly. Until March he was a colonel, commanding the 11st regiment, which he took over during the Guadalcanal campaign, and General Mullins said he had made it a regiment as good as any in the army.

General Dalton was 35. He was graduated from West Point in 1913. His wife who writes poetry under her maiden name, Katherine Starbird, is the daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. A. A. Starbird. She lives in Burlington, Vt.

I had a long talk with General Dalton in his tent the day before he was killed, and I was impressed with his keenness. He obviously did a lot of thinking.

He was talking about the doughboys, and he was full of praise for them.

"The dozer operators and the medics and a lot of others do a magnificent job," he said. "But it's the rifleman who has to go in there against the machine guns."

"A dozer operator has an immediate sense of accomplishment. So does the medic who helps a wounded man. A rifleman has to take a hill—just why, he hardly knows—and when it's taken what's he got? Just another hill ahead of him."

"Ernie Pyle was dead right when he said a soldier's war is just a hundred yards or so on each side of him. He doesn't see the big picture. And he wants to go home."

"A man who has been fighting this long has seen friends killed and he is tired and he figures he has about run out his chances. But he has to take another hill. And he takes it."

The general thought the correspondents had a great responsibility to try to make people back home understand how things are out here.

He mentioned the phrase "mopping up" which sometimes gives people the wrong idea of a rough operation like this at Balete Pass.

"It's a correct phrase militarily," he said. "You break the enemy strategically and the decision is won, but the job remains of defeating strong enemy remnants. That's mopping up, and in using the terms the army doesn't mean to imply any lack of ruggedness."

General Dalton was a disciplinarian. He discouraged officers from addressing men by their first names.

"When an officer gets too familiar with his men," he said, "he becomes hesitant about ordering a dangerous mission. He is likely to make a request instead of issuing an order. But a soldier doesn't like that. He doesn't want to take the responsibility of sending himself into danger. For one thing he feels it's throwing down his family back home. He wants an officer to make the decision. There's not much volunteering in the army, and I'm against it. Men want to be told what to do."

General Dalton was able and willing to do anything he asked his men to do, General Mullins said. "And he could do it better than any of them," he added.

General Dalton liked the troops and they liked him. He told me: "When I need a little bucking up I go up there"—he pointed off through the rain and mist to the front lines—"and talk to the men with the rifles."

General Dalton won a silver star with an oakleaf cluster, and a bronze star.

He had been a general only briefly. Until March he was a colonel, commanding the 11st regiment, which he took over during the Guadalcanal campaign, and General Mullins said he had made it a regiment as good as any in the army.

General Dalton was 35. He was graduated from West Point in 1913. His wife who writes poetry under her maiden name, Katherine Starbird, is the daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. A. A. Starbird. She lives in Burlington, Vt.

I had a long talk with General Dalton in his tent the day before he was killed, and I was impressed with his keenness. He obviously did a lot of thinking.

He was talking about the doughboys, and he was full of praise for them.

"The dozer operators and the medics and a lot of others do a magnificent job," he said. "But it's the rifleman who has to go in there against the machine guns."

"A dozer operator has an immediate sense of accomplishment. So does the medic who helps a wounded man. A rifleman has to take a hill—just why, he hardly knows—and when it's taken what's he got? Just another hill ahead of him."

"Ernie Pyle was dead right when he said a soldier's war is just a hundred yards or so on each side of him. He doesn't see the big picture. And he wants to go home."

"A man who has been fighting this long has seen friends killed and he is tired and he figures he has about run out his chances. But he has to take another hill. And he takes it."

The general thought the correspondents had a great responsibility to try to make people back home understand how things are out here.

He mentioned the phrase "mopping up" which sometimes gives people the wrong idea of a rough operation like this at Balete Pass.

"It's a correct phrase militarily," he said. "You break the enemy strategically and the decision is won, but the job remains of defeating strong enemy remnants. That's mopping up, and in using the terms the army doesn't mean to imply any lack of ruggedness."

General Dalton was a disciplinarian. He discouraged officers from addressing men by their first names.

"When an officer gets too familiar with his men," he said, "he becomes hesitant about ordering a dangerous mission. He is likely to make a request instead of issuing an order. But a soldier doesn't like that. He doesn't want to take the responsibility of sending himself into danger. For one thing he feels it's throwing down his family back home. He wants an officer to make the decision. There's not much volunteering in the army, and I'm against it. Men want to be told what to do."

General Dalton was able and willing to do anything he asked his men to do, General Mullins said. "And he could do it better than any of them," he added.

General Dalton liked the troops and they liked him. He told me: "When I need a little bucking up I go up there"—he pointed off through the rain and mist to the front lines—"and talk to the men with the rifles."

General Dalton won a silver star with an oakleaf cluster, and a bronze star.

He had been a general only briefly. Until March he was a colonel, commanding the 11st regiment, which he took over during the Guadalcanal campaign, and General Mullins said he had made it a regiment as good as any in the army.

General Dalton was 35. He was graduated from West Point in 1913. His wife who writes poetry under her maiden name, Katherine Starbird, is the daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. A. A. Starbird. She lives in Burlington, Vt.

I had a long talk with General Dalton in his tent the day before he was killed, and I was impressed with his keenness. He obviously did a lot of thinking.

He was talking about the doughboys, and he was full of praise for them.

"The dozer operators and the medics and a lot of others do a magnificent job," he said. "But it's the rifleman who has to go in there against the machine guns."

"A dozer operator has an immediate sense of accomplishment. So does the medic who helps a wounded man. A rifleman has to take a hill—just why, he hardly knows—and when it's taken what's he got? Just another hill ahead of him."

"Ernie Pyle was dead right when he said a soldier's war is just a hundred yards or so on each side of him. He doesn't see the big picture. And he wants to go home."

"A man who has been fighting this long has seen friends killed and he is tired and he figures he has about run out his chances. But he has to take another hill. And he takes it."

The general thought the correspondents had a great responsibility to try to make people back home understand how things are out here.

He mentioned the phrase "mopping up" which sometimes gives people the wrong idea of a rough operation like this at Balete Pass.

"It's a correct phrase militarily," he said. "You break the enemy strategically and the decision is won, but the job remains of defeating strong enemy remnants. That's mopping up, and in using the terms the army doesn't mean to imply any lack of ruggedness."

General Dalton was a disciplinarian. He discouraged officers from addressing men by their first names.

"When an officer gets too familiar with his men," he said, "he becomes hesitant about ordering a dangerous mission. He is likely to make a request instead of issuing an order. But a soldier doesn't like that. He doesn't want to take the responsibility of sending himself into danger. For one thing he feels it's throwing down his family back home. He wants an officer to make the decision. There's not much volunteering in the army, and I'm against it. Men want to be told what to do."

General Dalton was able and willing to do anything he asked his men to do, General Mullins said. "And he could do it better than any of them," he added.

General Dalton liked the troops and they liked him. He told me: "When I need a little bucking up I go up there"—he pointed off through the rain and mist to the front lines—"and talk to the men with the rifles."

Fag Purchase from Sailor Brings Fine

SEATTLE, June 1 (UP)—Stage and screen actor David Hoffman today was fined $50 and costs for purchasing 15 cartons of sea-store cigarettes from a sailor.

The 38-year-old actor was arrested Tuesday by a federal tax agent. He came here from Hollywood two months ago after becoming involved in studio labor troubles.

SEATTLE, June 1 (UP)—Stage and screen actor David Hoffman today was fined $50 and costs for purchasing 15 cartons of sea-store cigarettes from a sailor.

The 38-year-old actor was arrested Tuesday by a federal tax agent. He came here from Hollywood two months ago after becoming involved in studio labor troubles.

Portland Beavers Widen Leadership By Beating Seattle

By United Press

The Portland Beavers increased their Pacific Coast league lead to two and one-half games last night by downing the second-place Seattle Rainiers, 6-0, behind the effective mound work of veteran Sid Cohen.

The Oakland Aacorns pinned back the ears of the San Francisco Seals, 11-7, as Bob Joyce, ace of Lefty O'Doul's hurling corps, went down to his fifth loss against 10 wins. The improving Hollywood Stars made it two out of three against Los Angeles by a 9-8 count in 10 innings, while the Sacramento Solons stopped San Diego, 4-0.

Batting Spree Wins

Portland scored four runs in a wild fourth inning to hasten Seattle's downfall. The offense was paced by singles off the bats of Mel Nunes, Larry Barton and John O'Neill.

Oakland couldn't touch Joyce for five frames, then hopped on him for four runs in the sixth and three more in the seventh. Chet Rosenlund, Norm Dewese and Tom Hafey collected four hits each.

Guy Fletcher scattered seven San Diego hits as Sacramento rapped Frank Tincup, Jim Brillheart and Carl Dumler for 11 safeties. It was Fletcher's 10th victory and he had solid support from Jess Landrum, who swatted a triple and single in four tries.

Joe Mishasek of Hollywood outlasted five Los Angeles twirlers. He also scored the winning run in the 10th inning.

Fishing Prospects For Week-end Are 'Fair' to 'Poor'

PORTLAND, Ore., June 1 (UP)—Lane, Columbia, Curry, Josephine, Jefferson, Deschutes and Malheur counties offer best Oregon fishing possibilities for this coming weekend, according to the angling bulletin of the Oregon state game commission today.

Angling is reported "poor" or "very poor" in Douglas, Josephine, Jackson, Lake, Crook, Morrow, Gilliam, Wheeler and Willamette counties.

In Lane, streams are reported right for angling, with good catches coming from upper Lake creek, and perch fishing in Silt Coos lake "fair." Benton county conditions are only fair.

In Columbia, good catches of trout are expected with possibilities of bag limits this weekend for catfish perch and crappies over the entire diked district.

Tillamook and Coos counties report only fair angling conditions but in Coos catfishing in the Coquille and in drainage ditches has brought limit catches. Perch fishing is good at Ten Mile lake, and the inlet and bay are good for striped bass, best by trolling.

In Josephine, angling is poor, but salmon fishing good in the Rogue and promise is for exceptionally good fishing there as soon as the water settles. Roads to Tannon and Bolen lakes are snow-blocked.

RESUMES DUTIES

Mrs. Carrie Trollinger has resumed her duties as secretary of the La Grande chamber of commerce, after having been employed by another firm a few weeks.

TOTEM TOTER—He's not trying to qualify as "low mite on a totem pole." He's a home-wired bound Sgt. Charles M. Fudack of Oakland, Calif., appearing in Seattle with a totem pole—symbol of his service in the 42nd.

LA GRANDE EVENING OBSERVER

Phone 600

SPORTS

Complete Local Reports

Friday, June 1, 1945 Page 6

COOPER THE BRAVE—Manager Bob Coleman is pleased with conditions of Mori Cooper's $100,000 arm. Following salary squabble, St. Louis Cardinal ace went to Boston Braves for cash and pitcher Charley Barrett.

Baseball Standings

By United Press

AMERICAN LEAGUE
	W.	L.	Pct.
New York	22	13	.629
Detroit	19	12	.613
Chicago	17	16	.515
St. Louis	16	16	.500
Boston	16	19	.457
Cleveland	14	17	.452
Washington	15	19	.441
Philadelphia	14	21	.400

NATIONAL LEAGUE
	W.	L.	Pct.
New York	26	11	.703
Brooklyn	21	16	.568
Pittsburgh	19	16	.543
St. Louis	20	17	.541
Chicago	18	16	.529
Cincinnati	15	18	.455
Boston	13	20	.394
Philadelphia	10	28	.263

PACIFIC COAST LEAGUE
	W.	L.	Pct.
Portland	37	22	.627
Seattle	32	24	.568
Oakland	32	29	.525
San Francisco	29	30	.492
San Diego	30	32	.484
Sacramento	29	31	.483
Los Angeles	27	33	.450
Hollywood	21	38	.356

Sharp Reductions Made in Funds Of War Agencies

WASHINGTON, June 1 (UP)—The house appropriations committee today slashed more than $111,000,000 from funds for 19 war agencies for the year beginning July 1. It proclaimed that the reduction marked "the beginning of the end" for most of them.

The committee approved legislation providing $769,764,350 to operate the 19 agencies. This was $111,812,639 less than budget bureau recommendations and $206,848,850 less than current year funds.

Two Years of War Seen

During hearings on the legislation, however, the committee heard Rep. J. Buel Snyder, D., Pa., chairman of the subcommittee on war department appropriations, estimate that the war against Japan would last at least another two years.

As the 1946 war production board appropriation was being considered, Snyder told the committee:

"Japan still has about 6,000,000 soldiers; about 2,500,000 in the islands and about 5,000,000 in Manchuria. I would say that I can see possibly a war of two or more years with Japan."

As reported by the committee, the appropriation measure marks a reduction for every agency except the newly created office of war mobilization and reconversion and the office of economic stabilization.

The office of war mobilization had only $1,198,488 for its short life during the current year. For 1946, the committee recommended $43,335,400, which was $20,041,000 below budget bureau recommendations.

For OES, the committee recommended $196,250 compared to the $100,000 it received this year.

PRICE CONTROL DROPPED

WASHINGTON, June 1 (UP)—Cabbage will be removed from retail price control on June 6, the office of price administration announced today.

The La Grande Masonic Lodge Will Meet at the Snodgrass Funeral Home 2:00 p.m. Sat. To attend and conduct the funeral of George W. Hillman. By order of W.M. C. M. Humphreys Sec'y.

Army Prisoners Riot, Slay Guard, Destroy Barracks

INDIANAPOLIS, June 1 (UP)—A guard was killed and three soldier-prisoners wounded during a riot which broke out last night during an incendiary fire in the disciplinary compound at Fort Benjamin Harrison, fifth service command headquarters said today.

The riot started with the stoning of guards by the prisoners, all soldiers serving courts-martial sentences. The prisoners broke lights at the same time.

A short time later fire broke out in a barracks and the infirmary. The two buildings were at opposite ends of the disciplinary compound.

"Except for the fire the riot was soon quelled, but not before one guard was killed," the statement said. The compound held some 3,000 soldier-prisoners, it was reported.

Fire Fighter Dies

A fireman was a fifth casualty. Everett Jackson, 49, died this morning of a stroke he suffered while fighting the flames.

"Immediate cause of the riot was believed due to extra duty for infraction of prison rules," said a statement issued under authority of Major-Gen. James I. Collins, commanding general of the fifth service command at Columbus, O.

One prisoner was wounded seriously and two others only slightly, the statement said. Names of the casualties were not announced.

Nine barracks buildings were destroyed, the statement said.

Salmon Canning To Be Concentrated

WASHINGTON, June 1 (UP)—Concentration of the salmon canning industry of Puget Sound, Wash., started last year to save manpower and equipment, will be continued during the 1945 season, Harold L. Ickes, secretary of interior and coordinator of fisheries, announced today.

Although the general theory of operating a few firms at top production will apply this season, four instead of three plants will be authorized to pack salmon for 11 firms.

Ickes maintained the plan will save 450 cannery workers for the mainland, employing 100 in the San Juan islands where labor is available. About 20 cannery tenders will be released for use in Alaska, he said.

Famed Musician is Co-starred in Film

Jose Iturbi, famous pianist and symphony conductor, appears as a conductor with a problem in the motion picture, "Music For Millions," now showing at the Liberty theater.

His problem is one of manpower, as the war causes women to replace men in his orchestra.

Co-starred are Margaret O'Brien, Jimmy Durante and June Allyson, who plays the part of a bass fiddle player in the symphony orchestra.

LIBERTY

TODAY AND SATURDAY

Margaret O'BRIEN
Jose ITURBI
Jimmy DURANTE
June ALLYSON

MUSIC FOR MILLIONS

NEWS/CARTOON

Granada TONIGHT AND SATURDAY

MONOGRAM PICTURES PRESENTS

JOHNNY MACK
BROWN
"LAW OF THE VALLEY"
RAYMOND HATTON

COMPANION FEATURE

MONOGRAM PICTURES PRESENTS

BILLY GILBERT
EMERD HOWARD
MARIE ROSENBLUM

CRAZY KNIGHTS

The La Grande Masonic Lodge Will Meet at the Snodgrass Funeral Home 2:00 p.m. Sat. To attend and conduct the funeral of George W. Hillman. By order of W.M. C. M. Humphreys Sec'y.

Cantrell Bags Two Japs In One Minute

Marine Pilot Wounded, Plane Is Riddled

BOARD AN AIRCRAFT CARRIER IN THE PACIFIC — (Delayed) — A blazing 30 minutes over Japan won a hero's place for Marine Captain William A. Cantrell, a fighter pilot from La Grande, Oregon.

Captain Cantrell, a member of the "Eightball" squadron on this carrier, destroyed two and damaged two Jap planes as his plane was riddled with gunfire and his right foot became numb from shell fragment wounds.

When his squadron leader's compass failed to function, Cantrell was ordered to lead the outfit back to the carrier. Until he landed on one knew he had been wounded, or that his plane was damaged.

Cantrell scored his kills over the north of Kure in southwest Honshu when the marines went to the aid of a group of navy pilots. As the Japs attacked from the rear, Cantrell went to the rescue of a Corsair with two Japs on its tail. Firing until he was about 100 feet from one Jap, Cantrell evidently killed the pilot, and the plane turned on its back and "screached" for each.

He bagged his next plane in less than a minute when he hit one of three Japs attacking a Corsair. Flames poured out of the engine, as the enemy went down.

While attacking a third Jap, Cantrell's plane was hit and he was wounded in the foot. His plane jolted and there was a small explosion as black smoke leaked into the cockpit and hydraulic fluid splattered over him. He took a quick look and found a large hole in his left wing. His right foot had become numb, and he found shell fragments in his shoe.

Hearing a shout for help over his intercom, he pulled his Corsair into a sharp turn, and spotted a Jap making a high run on another Corsair. He damaged the Jap plane with a blast of gun fire.

When the leader of the strike found his compass damaged, he turned the lead to Cantrell. After three planes landed and before Cantrell could land, an enemy plane attacked. They were driven off by anti-aircraft fire, but it was a half hour before Cantrell, whose gas was running low, could land.

Five pieces of shell fragment were removed from Cantrell's foot.

For every five tons of steel used by railroads, four tons of iron and steel scrap are returned to the mills by them.

Teacher Wins Room Rent Charge Suit

OLYMPIA, Wash., June 1 (UP)—The Washington state supreme court held in a seven-to-two decision yesterday that Letha Malcom is entitled to recover a sum from Black Rock school in Yakima county.

The district agreed to pay her $1,200 a year but withheld $40 for rent of a room adjoining the school building. The court ruled that the monthly room rent was subterfuge to avoid paying the full annual salary.

One hundred pounds of apples are reduced to 13 pounds of dehydrated fruit for military consumption.

A New Shipment of FIRTEX JUST RECEIVED

- Ceiling
- Plank Board
- 4x12-ft. Sheets

Use it to remodel and insulate your home.

Teel's Paint Store

1308 Adams

House for Sale

A modern 2-bedroom house with basement, including 2 tons of coal. On 14th street, 2 blocks from state highway shops. Total price $2850. Only $700 down. See H. W. Smith in

The Log Cabin Store

Give 'em Everything!

★

Increase Your PAYROLL Allotment NOW

THE MIGHTY

7th WAR LOAN

★

BUY EXTRA BONDS!

War Bonds are the power . . . War Bonds are the plow . . . of the mighty war machine America is operating. We must plow deep, straight and thoroughly . . . cover for all time the rubble, refuse and stench of the axis hordes, in order to plant and reap the "Victory Garden" of free men!

LET'S PUSH UNION COUNTY'S QUOTA OVER THE TOP NOW!

This Advertisement Contributed in the Interest of the 7th War Loan by

BUNTING

Tractor Company, Inc.

CATERPILLAR DIESEL TRACTORS
DIESEL ENGINES - ROAD MACHINERY

Parts - Sales - Service

Twin Falls La Grande Boise