

Paper Collar Will Save Your Blouses

By EPSIE KINARD

JOAN LESLIE: Fastidious

Wear a paper collar—made of one sheet of cleansing tissue cut in halves and joined to make a throat-encircling band—under that blouse of calla lily splendor which you want to keep white.

The purpose of this buffer, which Joan ("Rhapsody in Blue") Leslie warns you not to yank out until every step of dressing is completed, is to catch all make-up smudges that a blouse collar ordinarily picks up.

Once make-up surplus and friction smears are transferred to a paper collar, says Joan, your blouse is a great deal safer from despoiling stains that make you look untidy before you start out, and that send your white beauties on too frequent trips to the laundry hamper or dry cleaner.

Patented Fashions

By EPSIE KINARD

NEW YORK—Another fashion of the future—plastic patent "leather" as shiny as your pumps but as supple as silk and as easy to cut and sew—makes its debut this summer in high-style accessories.

Used earlier to make bags which team up with summer's perennial patent leather shoes, this new plastic fabric now cuts a shine with white pique as trimming for belts, Dutch kerchiefs, high-hat "coifs," halter-gilets and Chinese coolie coats.

Launched by designer Arpad, such accessories are made to perform double-duty roles in wardrobes, and can appear at equal advantage with street clothes, play clothes or formal duds in which you want to dance or dine.

Double Duty Style

Around The City

A ship's chronometer, used by the U. S. navy in World War I and 2, and property of J. H. Peare for 66 years, is now on display in the window of his jewelry store.

This intricate timepiece, made in London, maker to the admiralty, has been in use on the Patriot for almost two years in the current war, and was personally returned to Peare by a naval officer.

Peare brought the chronometer to this country from Ireland in 1890. Such instruments used to be standard equipment of old-time watchmakers, because of the unusual accuracy, the time never varying as much as one second per month.

It differs from the usual clock in that it has a spiral spring, and winds with a key and chain composed of minute solid links fastened with a tiny pin through each link. The second hand marks off the time in half seconds.

Athena Girl Named Round-up Princess

Meanwhile, it was disclosed that Fred McMurray and Anne Baxter, motion picture stars, and 58 other members of a film cast, will be in Pendleton during the round-up, September 12, 13, 14 and 15, in connection with the filming of scenes for a western movie.

Pioneer Days Are Subject of Session Of Historical Group

Old forts of Union county were discussed last night by the Union county historical society when the group congregated in the Sacajawea hotel for their regular monthly meeting.

Kate Hanley and Ann Firkins were appointed to collect data concerning the old fort on the Hill's farm near Island City.

A communication from Jesse Hindman of Chico, Calif., was read, stating that he had 25 or 30 large historical volumes that he would turn over to the Union county society as soon as they obtain a permanent housing place for their articles of historic value.

Bessie Gekeler Ragain had charge of the pioneer story. She used for her subject early day attractions, describing circus parades, Fourth of July celebrations with their long parades, pioneer meetings at different towns, soldier encampments, temperance meetings, huckleberrying with neighbors, fairs, parties and games, community Christmas trees, spelling and singing schools, literary societies, community Thanksgivings, Easter with its old fashioned way of coloring eggs, and other interesting anecdotes. "Threshing with an old horse power threshing machine was the highlight for the children of the farm, but perhaps not so attractive for the mothers," Mrs. Ragain said.

The next meeting will be in Riverside park on the evening of July 19. Officers will be elected and yearly reports presented.
