

'Oriental' Turns Out To Be Native White of America

SAN FRANCISCO, July 6 (UP)—The strange case of Mah Jung Don, 25, a bus boy who thought he was Chinese but discovered he is a white American, may be settled Monday.

The apparently involuntary masquerade was revealed when the man known to San Francisco's Chinatown as Johnny Jung was arraigned on charges of stealing gold coins and watches.

A routine check of Jung's immigration record unearthed his birth certificate. It showed he was born in Sacramento, Calif., that his father's name was Leroy Forrest Allison and his mother's Lulu Dougherty.

When he was a year old Jung was adopted by a Chinese couple, taken to Hong Kong and reared as an Oriental. His foster parents still live there. Johnny Jung's English is meager, but he managed to explain that, "I catch wife China-side before come United States." His wife is Wong Gon Jung and she also lives in Hong Kong. They have no children.

Judge Edward Murphy postponed the hearing until Monday, when an interpreter can be in court.

Immigration records showed Jung came to the United States in 1941 aboard the President Coolidge. He said his father bought him passage. He has a Chinese "sister" in Hong Kong and a Chinese "brother" in San Diego. Jung's features are not Oriental, but his skin is somewhat dark, helping the illusion.

Both Sides Claim Victory in Heavy Ballot in Britain

LONDON, July 6 (UP)—Both sides claimed victory today in Britain's record-breaking general election on which Prime Minister Churchill's political fate hung, but nobody can say for sure what happened until the votes are counted July 26.

Close to 26,500,000 votes were cast in a generally quiet day, some observers estimated the figure is 500,000 more votes than in any previous election.

The morning papers let their political consciences dictate their stories on the election. The laborite Daily Herald predicted the conservatives will lose "at least 100 seats." If they did, Churchill's government would be out.

Lord Beaverbrook's conservative Daily Express, on the other hand, said the government would gain a 660 to 90 per cent majority. It claimed socialist and liberal leaders were conceding defeat.
