

Stephen Foster Tunes Featured at Meeting at Methodist Church

Strains of Stephen Foster melodies highlighted the program Tuesday at a meeting of the Young Women's Educational association in the social room of the First Methodist church.

The program followed a short business meeting, during which the women voted to donate $10 for a birthday party at McCaw General hospital at Walla Walla. Rev. Eugene Chamberlain of the Christian church, sang "I love Him because He first loved me," and Annetta Johnson talked on "Sense of hearing," which was the theme of the program. Mabel E. Doty spoke on "Stephen Foster - American troubadour," and Wilmer Baer, Joseph Gaiser, Harvey Carter, and O. P. Weigel sang Ethiopian melodies.

Florina Beeson and Norma Smith, playing piano duets, gave a medley of Foster melodies, and a Richard Crooks recording, "Ah, may the red rose live always," was played before the 125 women present.

Louise Reinicke gave two musical readings, and during the tea that followed Wylamine Berkley and Mae Stearns played violin duets, accompanied by Genevieve Carter.

Designers Borrow Ideas

NEW YORK (NEA)—News on the dress front is "sculptured bosom" of blocked-out color, set bra-fashion on slim black sheathes.

This theme is only one of many ways a New York designer creates clothes with a third-dimensional feeling—an idea inspired by the art of Piet Mondrain. This Dutch painter of abstract canvas of crossed lines and blocks of color. A recent exhibit of his work in New York's Museum of Modern Art explains the revival of interest which extends to dress design, and stimulates ideas that lend excitement to an entire fall collection.

Out to prove that color superimposed on black in single blocks, patchwork or stripes makes just as much excitement in a dress as on a canvas, Fox-Brownie show what they're up to in the two dresses pictured.

At left striped taffeta is set a daytime dress of black wool, and at right the blocked-out pattern which makes the "sculptured bosom" is jet-flecked red jersey, superimposed on a black crepe afternoon dress, solidly front embroidered with beads to simulate rain drops of jet.

Leisure Clothes Add Regal Look to Hostess for 'Dinner at Home' Wear

New York (NEA)—For their private lives, girls can swish in dinner-at-home cloths that look regal enough to clothe a queen. Out to entice leisure are easy lines, satin shimmer or sequin shine, which are often combined in costumes that bring to an ultimate blend the art of fashion and the art of relaxing.

One school of designing thought on relaxing costumes whoops it up for the blouse-and-trouser or the blouse-and-skirt costume. Trousers that spring the biggest surprise come bringing their own tops along. Skirts owe their new nonchalance to waistline drawings that confine fullness in front and to artists who dip their brushes in color to paint on can-cases of fabric free-hand designs or such exacting motifs as stars, cabbage roses, or chickens.

Out to pamper your vanity and dramatize your looks, the other designing school bucks for intimate house coats or elegant robes for relaxing. Pale in color, graceful in line, emblazoned by color inerts or flickering jewels, these leisure clothes are out to make you feel pampered and look cherished.

Your GI Rights Problems of Men In Service

By Douglas Larsen, NEA
 WASHINGTON, Oct. 5—Here are some questions from relatives of men in service regarding discharges:

Q. My husband writes me from France that he might not be home for two years. He is a captain in the Transportation Corps and has been overseas since early in 1945. I know that he has more than 80 points. This is contrary to everything I have read about men getting out of service or at least getting back from overseas. When can I expect him home according to the very latest War Department announcements?

A. Since your husband has written to you several regulations about bringing men back from overseas have been changed. He probably will be back before the end of the year, if not sooner and discharged.

Q. A friend who met my son overseas just a few weeks before he came home said my boy was sitting around doing nothing and was very unhappy. If he isn't doing anything why don't they send him home? He was in the infantry. Is there a chance he might be in the occupation army?

A. The army is getting the men back from overseas as fast as it can. If he saw action it is doubtful that he will be in the occupation forces.

Modern hurry-up methods of brining pickles are said by canning experts to be not as effective as grandmother's long-standing pickle jar, which promotes more crispness.
