

DULLES

tended the National Presbyterian Church. He served the church as an elder. The funeral will be held at the National Cathedral, an Episcopal church, however, because of space limitations at the Presbyterian church.

The President, in addition to directing that Dulles be given an official funeral, also ordered military honors. Dulles served as major with the general staff of the Army in World War I.

At graveside ceremonies, Dulles will be given a 19-gun salute honoring his former cabinet rank. A bugler will play taps.

Life Waned Gradually
Dulles' life had been gradually waning for weeks as cancer complicated by pneumonia sapped his once rugged strength.

The President said that Dulles was "brave in dying," as he was in living.

With Dulles when the end came in the medical center's executive suite were his wife of 47 years, Janet; his sons, John and Avery; his brother, Allen, head of the Central Intelligence Agency, and his sister Eleanor, a state department official.

Eisenhower was notified at Gettysburg, Pa. He walked sadly to the sun porch of his farm home and wrote in long hand on a pad a simple and moving tribute to his friend and counselor. Then he and Mrs. Eisenhower motored back to Washington and visited Dulles' widow for 20 minutes. She was reported by friends to be bearing up well.

In his four-paragraph tribute, Eisenhower called Dulles "one of the truly great men of our time" who devoted "a lifetime of labor for world peace."

"He was a foe only to tyranny," the President said of the former secretary.

World Eulogizes Dulles
Similar expressions of admiration for Dulles as a man and for his service to freedom came from leaders around the world.

"We've lost a good public servant," former President Truman said.

"A great American has passed," said Sir Winston Churchill, who visited Dulles only three weeks ago.

Vice President Richard M. Nixon said Dulles lived long enough to see history vindicate his policies, some of which seemed unpopular at the time he advocated them.

In Russia Radio Moscow reported Dulles' death routinely and without comment as the 14th item in a news program of 17 items.

Only in Communist East Germany and Czechoslovakia were bitter words spoken even in death of Dulles. The East German radio compared his policies with those of Hitler.

As the chief foreign policy architect for the United States, Dulles exercised profound influence over the whole course of the Western response to the Soviet challenge. He was responsible for a vast expansion of pacts and alliances that bound the free world together against Soviet imperialism.

As secretary of state he exercised a special brand of personal diplomacy, logging more than half a million miles of travel in observing, listening and negotiating.

He pursued this vigorous course until close to his 71st birthday last Feb. 25. A few days earlier — on Feb. 10 — he checked into the hospital for a hernia operation and doctors discovered he was suffering from a recurrence of the abdominal cancer for which he underwent surgery in 1956.

On April 15 the President, vacationing in Augusta, Ga., walked into a hastily-called news conference and announced with moistened eyes that his foreign policy chief had resigned.

Hertel was named Dulles' successor.

The President, in a gesture of deep devotion, later swore in Dulles as a special foreign policy consultant. But he never was able to function in that capacity to any extent.
