

Execution Date To Be Set For Charles Starkweather

OMAHA, Neb. (UPI) — State authorities today took steps to set a new execution date for mass killer Charles Starkweather.

The case of the 29-year-old former garbage man who admitted slaying 11 persons in two states shifted back to the Nebraska Supreme Court after a three-judge federal panel refused to extend a two-week execution stay past midnight Thursday.

Nebraska Atty. Gen. C. S. Beck said he would ask the state Supreme Court today for permission to authorize acting state Penitentiary Warden John Greenholtz to set a new execution date.

Starkweather had "no comment" when Greenholtz told him the circuit court had rejected his plea.

It appeared the red-haired slayer's execution would be delayed at least until Monday, and possibly for months if he chose to follow up either of two remote legal possibilities.

Greenholtz said it would take more than two days to summon official witnesses for the execution. Further delay might occur.

authorities said, if Starkweather either applied to a state court for a writ of habeas corpus, or appealed directly to a justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.

After 90 minutes of testimony, the circuit court coupled its ruling with the appeal be dismissed with the opinion Starkweather had not exhausted legal possibilities in state courts, usually a prerequisite to federal intervention.

Judge Joseph W. Woodrough read the opinion for the court that "no probable cause" appeared to exist to justify a federal hearing on his May 21 denial of a habeas corpus writ by U.S. District Judge Robert Van Pelt in Lincoln, Neb.
