ANN LANDERS

Answers Your Problems

Dear Readers: Get out the wet noodle. I'm in line for another 20 lashes. My editor insists on sharing the punishment as this one got past him, too. So, let's make it 10 for the editor and 10 for Yours Truly.

Somehow I told a gal who was 17 (her boy friend was trying to pressure her into accepting an engagement ring) that the boy was too old for her. He was 21. Now this is a goofy statement if I ever saw one.

My only excuse (and it's mighty feeble, is that both of us must have misread it, and thought he was 31. Our heads are bowed in double shame.

Dear Ann Landers: My father who is 58 came to live with us four years ago when Mother passed away. He adored my three little children and then they were crazy about him.

Five months ago he married a woman who has three sons by a former marriage. Now he gives all his time and attention to his grandchildren and none to his grandchildren. I think this is wrong because his grandchildren are not even blood relatives.

According to law who is entitled to his estate in case of his death? He always said his grandchildren would get everything, but this was before he married this woman.

Why do some people get foolish when they get old? He had everything a person could ask for when he lived with us. Now he's got himself tangled up with raising a family in his old age. Can you answer these questions? — Sad Eyed Daughter.

Dear Sad-Eyed Daughter: Do not look now, but the dollar signs are showing in those sad eyes of yours. According to law, persons named in the will get the inheritance. If there is no will, the laws of the state prevail. I wouldn't be a bit surprised if your father's stepchildren came in ahead of his grandchildren.

Your resentment suggests you are more concerned with what you get from your father than what you can give him. If you were truly interested in his welfare you'd be delighted that he's making a new life for himself. After all, a man 58 isn't exactly ready for the glue factory.

Stop running your children in a popularity contest with the stepchildren. The whole thing is unbecoming and has a crass commercial ring.

Dear Ann Landers: Last year I became interested in a boy I will call Jimmy. We were quite serious and planned to be married. I know now it was all too fast.

Two months ago Jimmy walked out on me. We decided to remain good friends, but not sweethearts. He promised to call me occasionally and take me out for old time's sake.

I waited several days and he didn't call—so I called him. He had a hundred excuses. He said his car was broken, his mother was sick and he had no money for a date. When I told him a phone call costs only a dime he had no answer.

The problem is this: When we were going together he borrowed $75 from me. I reminded him several times that I could use the money, but he ignored the hints. I didn't want to nag him for fear I'd lose him. But now that he's jilted me he's lost anyway and I'd like my $75 back. Is there any legal way I can force him to pay this debt? — Overdrawn.

Dear Overdrawn—You've had $75 worth of experience. Forget about the money—and the boy friend. Apparently you have nothing in writing (like a note) or you'd have mentioned it. If the fellow has integrity you may get your money at a later date. If he's a welcher, pressing and "re-mining" won't do any good.

PEACE COSTS MONEY

A message from Robert Young, star of television's "Father Knows Best."

"It's traditional for Mom and the kids to give Dad a present for Father's Day. But in these troubled times, there is one gift that every father would like to be able to give to his family every day of the year. The gift of peace.

"But peace costs money. Money for industrial and military strength to keep the peace. Money for science and education to help make peace lasting. And money saved by individuals to help keep our economy strong.

"Every U. S. Savings Bond you buy helps strengthen America's Peace Power—helps build a more secure world for your family to live and grow in. Think it over. Are you buying enough?"
