Atom Reactor Firing Termed 'Successful'

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) -The Atomic Energy Commission says ner of a rocket engine to power space ships was "successfully conducted."

But other details of the static test of the Kiwi-A, designed under the multi million dollar "Project Rover," were not released for security reasons

The complete test, lasting about five minutes, was staged Saturday with the nuclear reactor mounted on a railroad flatear. The reactor did not move during testing. Newsmen a mile and a half away heard a faint, dull sound as the engine started. The reactor noise was drowned out when two B57 planes dipped almost to tree top level to sample radiation. Five JATO, jet assisted takeoff, bottles were fired into the hydro-gen stream coming out of the reactor. They produced a series of strange shaped white clouds that spurted from the reactor nozzle and climbed to about 1,000 feet. The clouds created a target for the planes to test for radiation.

The test was conducted at the AEC test site about 80 miles northwest of here. There was one of the false start which scientists ob- July.

After the test, the AEC said further experiments would be conducted for about a month.
