Outspokenness Is A Healthy Thing

The Army versus the Air Force versus the Navy. The rivalry goes on despite the best efforts of Congress and the President at unification. Contrary to the impression given, the rivalry is not pure selfishness on the part of the generals and admirals, eager to play top roles in the nation's defense program. Basic to the rivalry are sincere differences of opinion as to what are the proper roles of the different branches in an era when warfare has been revolutionized by new

This week Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor retired as Army chief of staff before he was 60. He is probably the most outspoken protestant against the Army having to play second fiddle to the Air Force and the Navy since Gen. James Gavin, who also left the service in a due to be published soon. It should be a scorcher. Such outspokenness is a healthy thing. It leads to the airing of all sides of a question and is conducive to right decisions.

Vice President Nixon told Soviet Deputy Premier Kozlov this week that one of the troubles with Russia is lack of debate within the government. Everybody has to agree with the boss. Kozlov denied this, but there isn't much evidence that many argue for long with Khrushchev. Some of Germany's blunders in World War II can be traced to decisions made by Hitler, whom none could dispute.

Taylor may reason that he can serve his nation better outside the service, where he is free to speak his mind, than on active duty where he must exercise restraint.

Blame Lies There's Where The

Everybody is talking about inflation these days. Ike brought it up at his press conference recently. Politicians are predicting freely that it will be the main issue in next year's elections.

To most of us inflation means just one thing-higher prices. For the last year the average prices of most things have remained fairly stable. But the Cabinet Committee on Price Stability for Economic Growth that made its report Monday concluded that prices are going to start up again unless something happens to stop them.

Inflation since 1942 has been such that a family earning $3,000 in 1942 now needs to earn $5,613 just to stay even. A $5,000 income in 1942 now needs to be $9,233 to be equal.

The Cabinet committee rejects the theory that the answer has to be government control of prices and wages. Such controls, it concludes would be more harmful than more inflation. Four courses of action are recommended:

1. Congress should act by giving highest priority to the task of protecting the buying power of the dollar. (But the committee does not recommend just how this should be done other than by announcing good intentions.)

2. Balance the budget and start reducing the national debt. This means holding down federal spending, something the current Congress has not even attempted to do so far.

Avoid making federal bonds the equivalent of money. That is, avoid issuance of bonds which can be sold for face value, and thus changed into money, at any time. "There is only an imperceptible difference between the government's issuing bonds," the committee said, that are the equivalent of money," the committee said, "and the government just cranking up the printing presses and rolling out greenbacks."

There is a lot of politics in this report. It backs up the administration as against what the Democratic-controlled Congress

If inflation does turn out to be the big issue at the polls next year we will have the spectacle of the President and the Congress pointing fingers at each other and saying there's where the blame lies.

They Don't Want To Believe It

The President made it plain recently that he is strictly an amateur artist. He was asking for it when he criticized a painting in a collection being sent to Russia for exhibition. The lady in charge of the collection was miffed and said "Some people think his paintings aren't so good either."

Our sympathies are with him because what few comments we have made on the subject of modern painting have stirred similar ire. In fact the way those in the art world strike back at criticism arouses the suspicion that they are like those referred to in the Shakespearean line: "she protests too much."

It may be that the artists and their defenders have some measure of realization themselves that a lot of what passes for art these days, but is not actually pleasing to many people, may not really be good. But they don't want anyone to disturb them by coming right out and saying openly what they suspect but don't want to believe is true.
