ANN LANDERS

Answers Your Problems

Dear Ann: I've been married to a spoiled brat for six months. We are both 23. The characteristics I once considered "cute" now get on my nerves. When she used to get mad at me and pout I thought she looked adorable. Now I'd like to belt her one in the chops and put that lower lip back where it belongs.

Last night we argued about which TV channel to watch. I figured since she had her choice for two hours it was my turn. She stamped her feet and I simply yanked the plug and said "O.K., let's both read."

She ran to the bedroom locked the door, and it stayed locked until morning. I had to sleep on the couch. This is the third time in two months she's locked me out. Are we beyond help?—Sore.

Dear Sore: The wife who locks her husband out makes a big mistake. Some men might take this as a cue to try other doors—which might be open. Far better to stay in the same room and slug it out verbally. A good argument is much healthier than stony silence or complete

Engagement Off
NEW YORK (UPI)—What happens when an engagement is broken?

If the announcement has appeared in the newspapers, send a second notice announcing that the engagement has been ended. Then decide what you will do with the ring.

Legally, the girl gets to keep it. But most etiquette experts agree that it is better taste to return it as well as any other presents from the fiancé.

Should he ask the girl to keep the ring, she wears it on her right hand or has the setting changed. In case of a fiancé's death, an heirloom engagement ring or other piece of heirloom jewelry is returned to his mother. A ring not an heirloom need not be returned.

You'll feel cooler and therefore look cooler if you replace your full-length slippers with half-slips in summer weather. Have them in dark colors as well as white.

The reception was held in the church parlor immediately following the ceremony. The decorations were carried out with the bride's colors of pink, green and white. There were bride dolls and floral arrangements.
