Answers Your Problems

Dear Ann: About this Betty whose boy friends Al is allegedly chiseling the phone company to the horror of you and "Honest Pop" I think you're both all wet. Al is simply making an uncompleted call. Why should he pay for it? He saves a dime by letting the phone ring twice (their signal) then hangs up. Sure his dime is returned, but there's no chiseling involved because Betty phones him back, and this call is not free. Pop strikes me not as Diogenes' darling, but as a man who just got his phone bill. —Walter.

Dear Walter (and all you others who wrote to say I unjustly bum-rapped Al): The guy is a chiseler and this comes straight from an executive of the telephone company. Al's uncompleted call is really a signal. Telephones are not installed for purposes of signaling.

In some states the phone company can legally discontinue service to people who misuse the phone in this way. Of course it can't be enforced in petty cases like Al's but some business firms have lost their phones for putting a system similar to Al's on a mass production basis and sending coded messages via the uncompleted call.

When you add up all the Al's in the country who are trying to beat the system it ties up a lot of telephone equipment. This increases the bills you and I have to pay. Sure Betty calls him back but a home call costs less than a dime and the phone company loses again.

Dear Ann: My father-in-law is being divorced for the fourth time. He has two daughters by his last wife. They are 13 and 14 years old. He's trying to get custody of the girls and will probably have no trouble as his ex-wife is a known tramp.

My husband has been insisting we move into his father's house so I can keep an eye on the girls for him. I'm only 18 and we've been married just two months. I don't want the responsibility of two girls almost as old as I am. Besides I planned to work and make a little money so we can have a place of our own.

I'm afraid if I agreed to move into my father-in-law's house we'll be stuck for life. Please tell me if you think it could possibly work.—D.P.D.

Dear D.P.D.—All signs point to real trouble if you move in.

to your father-in-law's house. Tell your husband you refuse to accept the responsibility of his father's children and that Dad will have to hire a housekeeper and pay her.

Dear Ann: Our 17-year-old daughter received as a birthday gift a fur neckpiece from her 15-year-old boy friend. We were shocked. When she confessed rather triumphantly that she had asked him to buy it we almost passed out.

Are we crazy, or is this far too personal a gift for kids of this age? She tells us "times have changed" and we're strictly out of it. Have times changed that much—or is good taste still in style?—Idiot Parent.

Dear Parents: Your daughter must have found this little sap with a gieger counter. You are right. The gift is out of order and in bad taste.
