ANN LANDERS

Answers Your Problems

Dear Ann: I went steady with a boy for four months. We got along fine until two weeks ago when he began to act unafraid toward me. I can't figure it out but we just lost interest in each other and now we hardly speak.

Yesterday I heard he's going strong with another girl. I decided then to give him back his ring. I looked all over and that ring is nowhere in sight.

Do I owe it to him to replace the ring? Or shall I wait until he asks for it and then tell him he's out of luck?—Foggy Mind.

Dear Foggy: Since he hasn't mentioned the ring he probably attached little importance to it. Let the matter drop. If he should ask for it later explain you lost it but you'll buy another if he wishes.

Dear Ann: Something happened which dates back to your column on ironing bed sheets. Now I have a problem.

My husband wrote me a note this morning. It said, "Unless you are sick, dying or dead, I expect my shorts to be ironed and in my bureau drawer when I come home, Love, Lou."

I've never ironed Lou's shorts in the 12 years we've been married and he never complained—until now. I decided I wasn't going to spoil him at this late date so I did not iron his shorts. I cleaned out his closet instead.

Tonight when he came home he kissed me affectionately and headed right for the bedroom to check on the shorts. They were in his bureau drawer, folded neatly but not ironed!

He said nothing but I could see he was disappointed. You've put me in a bad spot, Ann. Please give me your frank opinion.

Should a wife who has never ironed her husband's shorts start after 12 years?—Kathleen.

Dear Kathleen: Well—here we go again! There are all kinds of husbands in this world. Some couldn't care less whether their shorts are ironed or not.

Others complain if their handkerchiefs aren't lined up just so. In my opinion it is not unreasonable for a man to want his shorts ironed. If your husband has decided after 12 years that he'd like ironed shorts—then iron 'em. You'll burn up less energy ironing seven pairs of shorts a week than arguing about it. I promise, Kathleen, if you begin to iron Lou's shorts he'll stand on his head to please you.

Dear Ann: Excuse the looks of this letter, please. I can't see very well. I have two black eyes and one is almost shut. I married a man I knew only two weeks. He was a bartender in this place and I was a cocktail waitress. He had a wonderful personality, swell sense of humor and everyone liked him. My husband died the year before and I was lonesome. Besides, I had two growing sons who needed a father.

When we got married he insisted on a nice honeymoon. He was tapped out but I had a few thousand dollars. He talked me into buying a second hand Jaguar. The third night he got absolutely plastered on tequila, accused me of making eyes at a piano player and beat me up.

He has punched me so many times I've lost count. I wear sun glasses all the time because no sooner am I rid of one mouse than he gives me another.

When he's nice there's no one sweeter. I really love him in spite of his faults, which makes it tough. I want to make my marriage work but I'm afraid he'll knock my block off one of these days. Please help me.—Trixie.

Dear Trixie: How can I help a woman who can't even count the black eyes and winds up saying "I love him?" A woman who continues to live with a man who beats her brains out is sick. Your children don't need a father like this—so stop making excuses. See a doctor and try to get well. And move out before he cripples you.
