Examine construction features on fall sweater buys as carefully as you choose styles and colors.

Check the knit to see that it is firm and rather loose and sleazy. Look for high gauge (number of stitches per inch) in relation to its weight of yarn.

Note ribbing at neck, sleeves and body. Test its firmness by gently stretching ribbing at bottom of sleeves. Good ribbing will spring back quickly.

While examining ribbing, notice the method in which ribbing is attached. There are two types—the merrowed neck and the looped neck. The merrowed neck joins the separately made ribbing to the body of the sweater in an inside seam. The looped neck has no seam—it is a continuation of the sweater. It is smooth, firm and looks hand finished. Sweaters with looped necklines are more expensive, but they wear well, and will not stretch or sag out of shape.

Look at body seams. They should be straight and even—should not twist.

Note buttonholes. They should be equally spaced from each other; have deep, closely spaced stitches.

Give some thought to selection. When you plan to buy a sweater, think first of all where it will be worn. If for school, favorites are slip-on and cardigan with simple necklines. If for sports-wear (with slacks and shorts) turtle neck, V-necks and long-sleeved slip-ons are popular. If occasion calls for dressier sweaters special touches at necklines are added or bolero type is selected.

A slip-on is versatile if jewelry, scarves and collars are interchanged. The cardigan, of course, can double as a wrap.

With an added touch, either sweater type can be worn around the clock. Sweaters go everywhere these days.

It pays to take care of sweaters you buy. These suggestions may serve as a guide to good sweater care.

Read hang tag instructions. Note any special handling requirements. Save instructions for guide for washing or dry cleaning.

Air sweaters after wearing. Plan for regular cleaning or washing. Badly soiled sweaters are difficult to clean.

Do not hang sweaters on hangers. Fold and place in drawer. Never use pins on sweaters. If snag occurs, pull loop to underside of garment.

When washing woolen sweaters, have the rinse water of the same temperature as washing water. Change of temperatures cause wool to shrink.

Use plastic bags to dry dry garments wrinkle-free—Drip-dry cottons and nylon blouses, will dry faster and be wrinkle-free if they are slipped while wet on a hang-plate or over which a large plastic bag, such as cleaners use, has been placed. The bag prevents the fabric from clinging together.

Storage "net" keeps hats pretty—Slip a nylon hair net over a feathered hat to store. This way feathers will stay unruffled.
