ANN LANDERS

Answers Your Problems

Dear Ann: For the past four years I've been endowed with what a scientist at Duke University terms "extrasensory perception." I can foretell when I'm going to get a letter, a phone call, which elevator will come, and sometimes I can even read my roommate's mind.

Although this scares me out of my wits at times, I'm delighted to be so gifted.

I was engaged to a fellow but he told me he's in no position to marry for several years so I broke it off. We meet at parties but he hasn't tried to get me back romantically, although we've had coffee dates.

My sixth sense tells me we will marry. This gives me the strength to see him on his terms. Shall I come right out and tell him I know what's in store for us? Please advise.—E.S.P.

Dear E.S.P.: I've only got five senses and I'm not too sure about them, so please don't ask me to give advice to someone who can read a roommate's mind and predict which elevator is coming. Any girl (with or without E.S.P.) who tells a boy she knows what the future has in store for him shows a lack of common sense which, in the final analysis, is the best kind after all.

Dear Ann: Our 16-year-old daughter is running us crazy. We want her to have friends and bring them to the house but there is a limit to everything.

Four nights last week she had between 20 and 25 kids here. They stayed until 2 a.m. The next morning the house looked like a tornado had hit. Cigarette butts everywhere, wet glasses on tables, pillows on the floor and pictures askew. (How do they climb walls anyway?) They cleaned the refrigerator and there wasn't a piece of bread for breakfast this morning.

When I ask why they always come here she says, "You should be glad you know where your daughter is nights."

My husband says I'm too hard on her, but then he doesn't have to clean up after these mobs. How about it?—Old Grey Mare.

Dear Grey: It is nice that the kids come to your house but you are a fool to serve as a janitor for this girl's teenage friends. Tell her all the girls should pitch in and supply refreshments and everyone must join forces and leave the house as they found it—or they can rent a hall.
