The official world record is 1,464.09 mph, set by U. S. Air Force Capt. Walter W. Irwin in May, 1958, in a Lockheed F-104 Starfighter.

Sally Rand Set To Dance At '64 Fair

CHICAGO (UPI) — No matter what a mayor of New York City once said about her, Sally Rand will be willing and ready to dance at the New York World's Fair 1964, she said today.

Unless, of course, a certain high school junior — her son — takes up too much of her time. Sally as a fan dancer helped put the Chicago Century of Progress on the world's entertainment map in 1933 and 1934, and in 1939 when New York played host to a world's fair, she got an offer to appear there.

The late Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia promptly issued a statement saying he would resign if she appeared there. Possibly, he disapproved of her act and her costume. The costume, oversized fans, was displayed most of the time between Sally and her audiences.

Sally is now playing at a Chicago night club and still packing them in with roughly the same act and the same costume, or lack of it.

And she still maintains it wasn't the fans, but civic pride that made LaGuardia act as he did. Because she had been such a success at a world's fair in Chicago, Sally said, LaGuardia didn't want her in New York.

Sally, who called herself an expert on world fairs, predicted that New York officials wouldn't ban her in 1964, on any grounds, either moral or civic pride. She said she had no invitation yet, but there were indications she would get one.

She admitted, however, that one thing might keep her and her fans from the New York fair, and that's her son. He'll be 16, and a junior in high school in 1964.

Grave Diggers Throw In Picks At Scene Of Mexican Disaster

MINATITLAN, Mexico (UPI)—The grave diggers gave up today in Minatitlan.

"What's the use of digging them out from under 15 feet of mud only to bury them under six feet of dirt?" asked Maj. Andres Caamu, commander of the rescue team sent here by the Mexican government.

"The rest of the dead must lie in peace where they are," the priest said. The smell of death lay everywhere in this mountain village that was almost wiped out in a grinding roar at 7:30 a.m. a week ago today when nightlong cloud-bursts loosened the slopes of Los Copales Mountains.

The living were walking dead, moving through the sloping streets like zombies or sleepwalkers or little children just awakening after a dream too frightening to be understood.

Silent and Unsmiling They were silent and unsmiling and could give no coherent account of the disaster that struck while most were sleeping or bud-dled awake in their mud and straw huts awaiting the end of the cyclone-borne rains.

The village of Minatitlan lies low on the slopes of Los Copales, nestled in a ravine formed by two interlocking mountainsides. Below is a nameless dry riverbed that last Tuesday became a great river, swollen and trapping the people of Minatitlan.

Village authorities say 1,374 persons were living here a week ago when the sides of the mountains trembled, slipped slightly and then roared downward toward the flooded riverbed with ever-increasing speed.

Almost 900 persons escaped death, though 100 were badly hurt. They crossed themselves and said it was a miracle. There was no warning and no premonition. Another 400 persons were crushed in their adobe huts or smothered beneath tons of muck and mire.

Houses crumbled or disappeared in an instant. Most of the few brick buildings that were the pride of the village — the stores, the city hall — crumbled and were covered up. The sea of mud, as soft as quicksand, poured into the houses that still stood.

God Fearing People The people of Minatitlan are God fearing and they saw miracles all about. The church escaped severe damage though houses all about it including the home of the priest were swept away. Those who fled to the church for safety were saved. The priest was saved because he was away, praying for a parishioner.

The army also reported miracles. One was a lieutenant found buried up to his neck but still alive. Another was a soldier swept 300 yards from the army garrison by a sea of mud, but still living. The other soldiers were killed in the garrison.

The survivors, stoic and unsmiling Indians, are wracked with flu and diarrhea and skin diseases but they do not complain. They have never known of electricity or potable water or of sewage problems and the lack does not bother them.

ON THE SPOT—Premier Fidel Castro's police reported the arrests of more than 30 rebels charged with plotting to bomb a bus station and assassinate public officials. The report followed a new leaflet raid on Havana, the capital of Cuba.
