

Annual Meeting Of Grain Growers Is Due Saturday

By ELGIN CORNETT
Wallowa Extension Agent

Wallowa County Grain Growers annual meeting will be Saturday, Dec. 5 with a lunch in the stationery building at 9:30 a.m.

It is rumored that the feed mix department would prepare the food since they are doing that type work everyday and have mixing equipment.

Farm-City Week is advertised for November 29-30. That is a week when farm people are supposed to speak favorably of businessmen, if they can, and city people are expected to avoid using suggestive words to describe a farmer.

To follow the get acquainted theme, speakers are in order for any group meeting. Oregon State College Extension people have offered to send a speaker for any occasion if asked in advance. To coin an old saying, "see your county agent about it."

Sheep and Wool Days, Nov. 13 and 14 at Oregon State College is a new program for interested people. It is not sheep and wool "days", but a place to hear experts' talk on wool grades, lamb feeding, disease research and marketing.

This program is held on a weekend with a good football game for those who believe that is all there is to college.

The bull calf sale at the fairgrounds tomorrow will use a safe ring in the quonset building because it is heated.

This will give bulls, buyers, and visitors an equal chance to get acquainted. Of course waiting at a friend may be taken for a bid on a bull.

Good cattle on a variable weather were featured on the annual Hereford Tour last week with about fifty people in attendance.

Bull weight guessing was tried at the Oveson ranch as a result of performance testing program underway there.

Cattle owned by Jim McCrae, Fritz Weinhard, and Marion McCrae were inspected before lunch was served by the county association in Wallowa.

Ranch stops after noon included: Wolfe Herefords, Stein Brothers, Daggett Herefords and Van Elkland Herefords.

Visitors from Baker and Union Counties were introduced by the county agent who was master of ceremonies throughout the tour.

Bull calves consigned to the Wallowa County cattle sale were exhibited at each ranch visited. The local Hereford association will sell 47 calves tomorrow at the fairgrounds in Enterprise. Calves are to be shown at 10 a.m. and the sale starts at 1 p.m.

Neighbors stoned the Winkley house when they gave Janet for adoption to a couple in Manchester when she was born in June, 1958. Mrs. Winkley said she wanted to give her unborn child to Americans because they "have a broader outlook."

Irene Savely of Baker, and Donald E. Kooch of Enterprise, represented the La Grande National Farm Loan Association at the annual four-state conference of NFLA representatives in Spokane earlier this week.

The associations make and service long-term farm and ranch loans for the Federal Land Bank of Spokane in Idaho, Montana, Oregon and Washington.

Conference delegates studied problems incident to inflated monetary values and also reviewed recent federal legislation pertaining to land bank and association operations.

Directors of the La Grande association which serves Baker, Union and Wallowa counties, in addition to Savely and Kooch, are: Merton A. Davis, Union; Charles Smutz, La Grande; Marion R. McCrae, Wallowa; Oren F. Hug, Elgin, and Grant Cooley of Cove.

Wayne Simons of Low Cost Auto in La Grande, received a qualifying certificate following completion of an intensive training course for Renault service managers and mechanics.

The course was held in Pendleton recently with a factory-trained instructor.

POTENTIAL RIVALS—Two potential Presidential rivals, N.Y. Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (left) and Sen. John Kennedy (right) chat amiably with New York's Francis Cardinal Spellman at the 15th annual Alfred E. Smith dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, N.Y. Speaking at dinner, both Rockefeller and Kennedy warned that freedom was in jeopardy and that self-denial was necessary to save it.

Current TV Quiz Investigation Unlike Sensationalism Of Past

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The sensational nature of the House TV quiz show investigation is more a result of circumstances than any desire of its director to produce a "spectacular."

Compared with some of the other big congressional inquiries of the recent past, Chairman Oren Harris (D-Ark.) of the investigating subcommittee is staging the TV hearings in a muted manner. Although nobody would mistake it for an organ concert, the hearing has few of the Broadway and Hollywood trappings often employed at Senate investigations.

No floodlights illuminate the House caucus room. No cameras grind away while a witness is testifying. Historians by subcommittee members are kept to a minimum.

This relatively subdued atmosphere is a product both of House rules and an effort on the part of Harris to avoid the type of criticism that some other investigation groups have drawn.

Study Regulatory Agencies

The subcommittee, an arm of the House Commerce Committee, was set up last year to study government regulatory agencies such as the Federal Communications Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In some respects, the subcommittee's method of operation stands out in sharp contrast to such highly publicized Senate hearings as the crime investigation, the Communist inquiries, and the racketeers sessions.

These topics were closely identified in the public mind with the men who headed the investigative groups — Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), the late Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R-Wis.) and Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.).

Each in his own way was a more colorful personality than Harris. Live television, which is permitted at Senate hearings but not in the House, stamped their images on the public eye.

Because they represent the same state, Harris invites comparison with McClellan, whose familiar "district attorney" style of presiding at a hearing made him the scourge of labor racketeers.

Uses Friendly Touch

In public session, Harris seems more detached and does not bear down as hard as McClellan. His questioning generally is more in the nature of a friendly inquiry than a cross-examination.

This contrast, of course, stems in large part from the fact that McClellan usually was dealing with hasty witnesses. When the occasion arises, Harris can be tough enough.

Backstage, Harris, possibly of necessity, runs a tighter ship. No subcommittee staff member has anything like the authority that McClellan vested in his former chief counsel, Robert F. Kennedy.

Harris, who has McClellan's old House seat, normally keeps the subcommittee's plans to himself and has imbued the staff and other members with an unusual sense of security. He rigidly follows the House rule that allows a witness who has derogatory information to give his testimony at closed sessions.

Humorist Well Received By Club

Humorist John Pettley, Englishman-at-large, was well received by the approximately 152 members of the Knife and Fork club and their guests here Wednesday.

During his talk it was brought to mind how some of our insignificant every day expressions would confuse a person not raised in our country. He also read clippings from California papers that would take an expert to figure the meaning, he said.

Dr. Fred Olsen introduced the speaker, and a new member, Glen Lester. He also introduced Rod Snyder, who provided the background organ music for the dinner.

Hates Diaper Work; Giving Baby Away

TIMPERLEY, England (UPI) — Mrs. Sheila Winkley, 27, who hates diaper changing and battle washing, said today she hoped a childless American couple would adopt her latest child when it is born in February.

"It isn't that I do not like babies," she said, "but I just do not want the trouble connected with them."

Mrs. Winkley and her unemployed husband gave away their fourth child, Janet, for adoption last March. The third, Christine, 3, has been in a public orphanage since she was seven months old, awaiting adoption. They kept the first two, David, 8, and Annette, 5.

"I know it is selfish but now I have got to the point where I cannot go on with it," Mrs. Winkley said.

"I do not want to get up in the middle of the night. I do not want to have the feeding and the washing of diapers — all the things you have to go through with a baby."

Neighbors stoned the Winkley house when they gave Janet for adoption to a couple in Manchester when she was born in June, 1958. Mrs. Winkley said she wanted to give her unborn child to Americans because they "have a broader outlook."
