"I'd say these seats are comparable to a six-inch TV screen!"

Movie Producer Says Super Film Productions Necessary

By VERNON SCOTT UPI Staff Writer

HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—King Vidor, who has the distinction of twice refusing to direct "Ben-Hur," says the future of motion pictures lies in the multi-million-dollar super-colossal if films are to survive at all.

Vidor's paradoxical point of view stems from his own particular objection to the "Ben-Hur" scripts. He first rejected the picture in 1924, and again two years ago in the modern version.

"My reasons were personal," he said, "and I'd rather not discuss them. I think it will be a very fine film."

"It is exactly the type of movie that must be made to combat television. We have to produce movies that are spectacles, entertainment that cannot possibly be seen on television."

To entice televisioners from the hearthside, Vidor prescribes wide-screen color epics filled with masses of people and spectacular scenery.

Fits Spectacular Label His own newest picture, "The Sign of the Cross," fits the description.

Costing six million dollars, the epic is made in "Super Technicolor-70," a new large-screen process that dwarfs present big-screen operations.

"The 'drop-in' movie is a thing of the past," Vidor went on. "The cost of going out to a theater has made movie-going a special event that must be planned in advance. It usually means dinner out, a baby sitter and a group of friends."

"There are so many old and wonderful films on TV, people won't go out to see new ones," Vidor pointed out spectacles as old as movies.

"D. W. Griffith began the epic film with 'Birth of a Nation,' radiating of giving motion pictures the symphonic treatment—themes and movements within the scope of a story."

Vidor Supports Thesis "I never want to make a picture with only two or three people up on the big screen. You must fill it with thousands of performers and action."

In support of his thesis, Vidor said the biggest box office hits in history were jumbo productions—"Gone With the Wind," "Ten Commandments," "The Robe," "Duel in the Sun," "Covered Wagon" and "The Big Parade."

"Once it was possible to fill the big screen in Hollywood," he said, "Not now. You must go on location to be able to afford the extras. And shoot at actual sites. It is too expensive to reproduce them in Hollywood. The demands of TV and movies are absolutely different," he concluded. "And movie-makers must discover this before it is too late."
