Churches Approach Problem sphaghetti dinner served by they do not want to again disservice, vegetable or salad. Of Juvenile Delinquency

Religion In America By LOUIS CASSELS UPI Staff Writer

If churches want to do some thing about juvenile delinquency they should approach the problem realistically, Sentimental and superficial programs may ease the consciences of church members but they do more harm than good to disturbed children.

That advice comes from Dr Edward E. Thornton, professor of pastoral care at the Institute of Religion, Houston, Tex. Dr. Thornton has made an intensive study of the failures and frustraions which churches often en counter in their attempts to help delinquent children. His findings, reported at a recent Southern Baptist youth counseling conference, are equally applicable to other denominations.

The first step toward effective church work in this field, Dr. Thornton said, is to abandon any moralistic or "punitive" approach to delinquent youth.

Stems From Disturbance Social scientists have amassed abundant proof, he said, that juvenile delinquency is not willful wickedness, but is "a symptom of emotional disturbance" in children who have been starved of parental love in the earliest years Loving the unloved is supposed to be the church's specialty. But it is neither easy nor simple to "communicate love" to disturbed children who have known nothing but hate and rejection. The task calls for "creative imagination" and "the courage to face facts. One of these facts is that "the emotion disturbance which begets delinquency is deeply set in the child's personality by the time he is eight years old." And the cru-cial factors in causing it are not the neighborhood, not the school, not a lack of church attendance but the child's own immediate home environment and particular ly his relationships with his par Must Reach Children This means, Dr. Thornton said, that churches must "find a way to reach pre-delinquent children between the ages of 5 to 8." And in searching out these children they must look beyond "the lit white cottages of suburbia' into the urban slums where pov-erty, overcrowding and broken homes vastly increase the likeli-hood of a child's being deprived of parental love. When can a church do for these dispossessed children once it has established contact with them? It depends on how far they have drifted before they are found.

"All of the traditional minis tries of the church" - including Sunday schools, youth activities, summer camps, recreational centers and sports programs - can
